1. [Officina, Latin.] Place where business is transacted.

What shall good old York see there,
But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones? Shakespeare.
Empson and Dudley, though they could not but hear of these scruples in the king's conscience, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. Bacon.
He had set up a kind of office of address; his general correspondencies by letters. Fell.

To OFFICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to discharge; to do.

And angels offic'd all. Shakespeare.

OFFICER. n. s. [officier, French.]

1. A man employed by the publick.

'Tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place. Shakespeare.

Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. Bacon.

If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. Templ.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself up from all approaches. South's Sermons.

Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A superior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.

Since he has appointed officers to hear it, a suit at law in itself must needs be innocent. Kettleworth.

2. A commander in the army

If he did not nimbly ply the spade,
His truly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his toughest back. Dryden.

I summon'd all my officers in haste;
All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.

'He had disposition he made in landing his men, shews him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Arbutnot.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals, or man accountable to the law.

The thieves are possest with fear
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shakespeare.

We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. Shakespeare.

OFFICERED adj. [from officer.] Commanded; supplied with commanders.

What could we expect from an army officered by Irish papists and outlaws? Addison's Freeholder.

OFFICIAL. adj. [official, Fr. from office.]

1. Conducive; appropriate with regard to use.

In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. Pertaining to a publick charge

The tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice. Remains That in th' official marks invested, you non do meet the senate. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

FI'CIAL. n. s.

Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayliffe.

A poor man found a priest over-familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY. n. s. [officialité, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.

The office of an officialty to an archdeacon.

To OFFICIATE. v. a. [from officio.] To give, in consequence of office.

All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light
Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

To OFFICIATE. v. n.

1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.

No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforelaid law. Sanderfon.

Who of the bishops or priests that officiate at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul? Stillingsfleet.

To prove curates no servants, is to tell us them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which, considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Cuddeker.

2. To perform an office for another.

OFFICIAL. adj. [from officina, a shop.]
Used in a shop, or belonging to it:
thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIOUS. adj. [officieux, French;
officiosus, Lat.]

Yet, not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to thee, earth's habitation. Milton.

2. Importunely forward.

You are too officious
In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakesp.
At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon.

Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious, but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Add.

OFFICIOUSLY. adv. [from officious.]

1. Importunately forward.

The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryd.
Flatt'ring crowds officiously appear,
To give themselves, not you, a happy year. Dryd.

2. Kindly; with unask'd kindness.

Let thy goats officiously be nurs'd,
And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryden.

OFFICIOUSNESS. n. s. [from officious.]

1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.

I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South.

2. Service.

In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Brown.

OFFING. n. s. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

OFFSET. n. s. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.

They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the root, producing offsets or creeping under ground. Roy.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root. Locke.

OFFSCOURING. n. s. [off and scour.]
Recrement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.

Thou hast made us the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people. Lamentations, iii. 45.

Being accounted, as St. Paul says, the very filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things.

Kettlewell.

OFFSPRING. n. s. [off and spring.]

1. Propagation; generation.

All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation. Hooker.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendants.

When the fountain of mankind
Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;
This was a charge that all his heirs did bind,
And all his offspring grew corrupt therein. Davies.
To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known. Dryden.

His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities. Addison.

3. Procreation of any kind.

Thou' both fell before their hour,
Time on their offspring hath no power;
Nor fire nor rote their days shall blast,
Nor death's dark vale their days o'ercast. Denham.

To OFFUSCATE. v. a. [offusco, Latin; offusquer, French.] To dim; to cloud;
to darken.

OFFUSCATION. n. s. [from offuscate.]
The act of darkening.

OFF. adv. [oft, Saxon.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.

In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Corinthians, ii. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hammond.

Favours to none, to all the smiles extends,
Oft she rejects, but never once offends. Pope.

OFFTEN. adv. [from oft, Saxon; in the comparative, oftner; superlative, oft-nest.] Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,
Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day the liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine oftner infirmities. 1 Timothy, v. 23.

In journeying oft, in perils in the wilderness. 2 Cor. ii. 26.

A lusty black-brow'd girl, with forehead broad and high,

That oft had bewitch'd the sea gods with her eye. Dryden.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison's Freeholder.

OFFTENTIMES. adv. [often and times.]

From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which oftner was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine oftner infirmities. See OF-TEN.] Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed Trinity a matter needless, to be so oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Woodward.

It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of Providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury.

OFFTIMES. adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.

*Of times nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
Well manag'd.* Milton's Paradise Lost
*Of times before I hither did resort, Charm'd with the conversation of a man
Who led a rural life.* Dryden and Lee.
OGE'E. } n. f. A sort of moulding in OGE'VE. } architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow; almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vi-truvius calls cima. Cima reversa, is an ogee with the hollow downwards. Harris.
TO OGLE. v. a. [oggh, an eye, Dutch.] To view with side glances, as in fondness; or with a design not to be heeded.
From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheek,
And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon ogling and clandestine marriages. Ad. n.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking glass. Arbutnot.

OGLER. n. f. [oggheler, Dutch.] A sly gazer; one who views with side glances.
Upon the diffuse of the neck-piece, the tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Ad. n.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. Arbutnot.

OGLIO. n. f. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.

These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great ogles, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oglio or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their sects and opinions? K. Charles.

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are ogles of guests, as well as of dishes; and that the liberty of a common table is as good a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Estr.

OGRESSES. n. f. [in heraldry.] Cannon balls of a black colour.

OH. interj. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

He,
Like a full acorn'd boar, a German one,
Cry'd, ob! and mounted. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ob me! all the horse have got over the river,
what shall we do? Walton's Angler.

My eyes confess it,
My every action speaks my heart aloud,
But ob, the madness of my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden. Spanish Fryar.

OIL. n. f. [oel, Saxon; olum, Latin.]

1. The juice of olives expressed.
Bring pure oil olive beaten for the light. Exod.
2. Any fat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.
In most birds there is only one gland; in which are divers cells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham.
3. The juices of vegetables, whether expressed or drawn by the still that will not mix with water.

Oil with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypostatical, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inflammable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises after the spirit. The oil is attribute to this principle all diversity of colour. There are two sorts of oil; one, which swim upon water, as oil of sweet and lavenwhich the chemists call essential, and another which probably is mixt with salts, and will sink in water, as the oil of guaiacum and cloves.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit. Harris.

A curious artist long inur'd to toil
Of gentler sort, with combs, and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So toucht his curls, his mighty soul was fir'd. Boyle.

TO OIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

Amber will attract straws thus oiled, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much oiled, for in those needles consisting free upon their center there can be no adhesion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves. Swift.

OIL COLOUR. n. f. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

Oilcolours, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preserved long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Bzyl.

OILINESS. n. f. [from oily.] Unctuous-ness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.

Basil hath fat and succulent leaves; which oil-ness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable, so as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bacon.

Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whole oil is evident, he nameth odor. Brown.

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the calcous parts, an oiliness from the butyraceous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most antacid; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their oiliness. Floyer.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

OILMAN. n. f. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OIL SHOP. n. f. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY. adj. [from oil.]

1. Consisting of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.

The cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge, not because it sticketh faster, but because an preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil.

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon's Natural History.

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscid oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for tewel. Digby.

2. Fat; greasy.

This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's;
Go call him forth. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

OILY GRAIN. n. f. A plant. Miller.

OILY PALM. n. f. A tree. It grows as high as the mainmast of a ship. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

TO OINT. v. a. [oint, Fr.] To anoint;
to smear with something unctuous.

They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
Or from the founts where living sulphurs boil,
They mix a med'cine to loment their limbs. Dryd.

Ismarus was not wanting to the war,
Directing ointed arrows from afar;
And death with poison arm'd. Dryden's Æneid.

ONIMENT. n. f. [from oint.] Unguent; unctuous matter to smear any thing.

Life and long health that gracious oniment gave,
And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again
The senseless corpse appointed for the grave. Spens.

OKER. n. f. [see UCHRE.] A colour.

And Ktairus taking for his younglings cark,
Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

Red oker is one of the most heavy colours; yellow oker is not so, because it is clearer. Dryden.

OLD. adj. [alib, Saxon; alt, German.]

1. Past the middle part of life; not young.

To old age since you yourself aspire,
Let not old age disgrace my high desire. Sidney.

He waxes high and low, young and old. Shak.

Wanton as girls, as old wives tabulous. Cowley.

'Tis greatly wile to know, before we're told,
The melancholy news that we grow old. Tyng.

2. Decayed by time.

Raiment waxed not old upon thee. Deuteronomy.

3. Of long continuance; begun long ago.

When Gardiner was sent over as ambassador into France, with great pomp, he spoke to an old acquaintance of his that came to take his leave of him. Candian's Remains.

4. Not new.

Ye shall eat of the old store. Leviticus.

The vine beareth more grapes when it is young;
but grapes that make better wine when it is old;
for that the juice is better concocted. Bacon.

5. Ancient; not modern.

The Ligurians were an old nation, and injured to hardship; which was the reason of the

6. Of any specified duration.

How old art thou?—Not so young, Sir, to love a woman for flinging; nor so old, to rest on her for any thing. I have years on my back forty-eight. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not:

In t'phorus I am but two hours old,

As strange unto your town as to your talk. Shak.

He did unfold

Within an ox-hide, that'd at nine years old,

All th' airie blasts, that were of stormie kinds. Copman.

Any man that shall live to see thirty persons descended of his body alive together, and all above three years old, makes this feast, which is done at the cost of the state. Bacon.

7. Substituting before something else.

I qual fecity with them to hold,

Thou need'st not make new songs, but sing the old. Cowley.

The Latian king, unless he shall submit,

Own his old promise, and his new forget,

Let him in arms the power of Turnus prove. Dryden.

He must live in danger of his house falling about his ears, and will find it cheaper to build it from the ground in a new form; which may not be so convenient as the old. Swift.

8. Long practised.

Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, will they now commit whoredoms with her? Exekiel's

9. A word to signify in burlesque language, more than enough.

Here will be old Utis; it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakespeare's

Here's a knocking indeed; if a man were porter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare.

10. Of old; long ago; from ancient times.

These things they cancel, as having been instituted in regard of occasions peculiar to the times of old, and as being now superfluous. Hosker.

Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
More argels to create. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A land

A land there is, Hesperia nam'd of old,
The soil is fruitful, and the men are bold;
Now call'd Italia, from the leader's name. Dryden.

In days of old there liv'd of mighty fame,
A valiant prince, and Theseus was his name; Dryd.
OLD FASHIONED. adj. [old and fashion.]
Formed according to obsolete custom.

Some are offended that I turned these tales into modern English; because they look on Chaucer as a dry, old-fashioned wit, not worth reviving. Dryd.

He is one of those old-fashioned men of wit and pleasure, that shews his parts by railery on marriage. Addison.

OLDEN. adj. [from old; perhaps the Saxon plural.] Ancient. This word is not now in use.

Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal. Shaksp.

OLDNESS. n. f. [from old.] Old age; antiquity; not newness; quality of being old.

This policy and reverence of ages, makes the world bitter to the best of our times; keeps our fortunes from us till our oldness cannot relish them.

OLEAGINOUS. adj. [oleaginus, Lat. from oleum; oleagineux, French.] Oily; unctuous.

The sap, when it first enters the root, is earthy, watery, poor, and scarce oleag nous. Arbutnot.

OLEAGINOUSNESS. n. f. [from oleaginous.] Oiliness.

In speaking of the oleaginousness of urinous spirits, I employ the word most rather than all. B-y-le.

OLEANDER. n. f. [oleandre, Fr.] The plant rosebay.

OLEASTER. n. f. [Latin.] Wild olive;
a species of olive. It is a native of Italy, but will endure the cold of our climate, and grow to the height of fixteen or eighteen feet. It blooms in June, and perfumes the circumambient air to a great distance. Miller.

OLEOSE. adj. [oleosus, Lat.] Oily.

Ruin water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oley particles it contains. Ray.

In falcons is a small quantity of gall, the oleous parts of the chyle being spent most on the fat.

Floyer in the Humours.

TO OLFACT. v. a. [olfactus, Latin.] To smell. A burlesque word.

There is a Machiavilian plot,
Tho' every rare olfact it not. Hudibras.

OLFACTORY. adj. [olfactoire, Fr. from olfacio, Lat.] Having the sense of smelling.

Effluvia, or invisible particles that come from bodies at a distance, immediately affect the olfactory nerves. Locke.

OLIDUS. adj. [olidus, Lat.] Sunk-

OLIDOUS. ing; stuid.

In a direct cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish, whereof this humour may be a garous excre-tion and olid n. separation. Brown.

The first salt would have been not unlike that of men's urine; of which olid and despicable liquor I chose to make an instance, because chemists are not wont to take care for extracting the first salt of it. Boyle.

OLIGARCHY. n. f. [oligarchia.] A form of government which places the supreme power in a small number; aristocracy.

The worst kind of oligarchy is, when men are governed indeed by a few, and yet are not taught to know what those few be, whom they should obey. Sidney.

We have no aristocracies but in contemplation;
all oligarchies, wherein a few men domineer, do what they list. Burton.

After the expedition into Sicily, the Athenians chose four hundred men for administration of affairs, who became a body of tyrants, and were called an oligarchy, or tyranny of the few; under which hateful denomination they were soon after deposed.

Swift.

OLLIO. n. f. [olla, Span.] A mixture;
a medley. See OLLIO.

Ben Jonson, in his Sejanus and Catiline, has given us this ollio of a play, this unnatural mixture of comedy and tragedy. Dryden.

I am in a very chaos to think I should forget myself. But I have such an ollio of affairs, I know not what to do. Congreve.

OLITORY. n. f. [olitor, Latin.] Belonging to the kitchen garden.

OLIVASTER. adj. [olivastre, Fr.] Dark ly brown; tawny.

The countries of the Abyssines, Barbary, and Peru, where they are tawny, olivaster, and pale, are generally more sandy. Bacon.

OLIVE. n. f. [olive, French; olca, Lat.]
A plant producing oil; the emblem of peace; the fruit of the tree.

The leaves are for the most part oblong and ever-green, the flower consists of one leaf, the lower part of which is hollowed; but the upper part is divided into four parts, the ovary, which is fixed in the center of the flower cup, becomes an oval, soft, pulpy fruit, abounding with a fat liquor inclosing an hard rough stone. Miller.

To these, heav'n's, in thy nativity,
Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace and war. Shakspere.

In the purlows of this forest, stands
A sheepcote fence'd about with olive trees. Shaksp.
The seventh year thou shalt let it rest. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and olive yard. Exodus, xxiii. 11.

Their olive-bearing town. Dryden's Æneid.

kind of pancake made with eggs.

OMEN. n. f. [omen, Latin.] A sign good or bad; a prognostick.

Hammond would steal from his fellows into places of privacy, there to say his prayers, omen of his future pacifick temper and eminent devotion. Fell.

When young kings begin with scorn of justice,
They make an omen to their after reign. Dryden.
The speech had omen, that the Trojan race
Should find repose, and this the time and place. Dryden.

Choose out other smiling hours,
Such as have lucky omen shed
O'er forming laws and empires rising. Prior.

OMENED. adj. [from omen.] Containing prognosticks.

Fame may prove,
Or omen'd voice, the messenger of love,
Propitious to the teach. Pope's Odyssey.

OMENTUM. n. f. [Latin.]

The cawl, called also reticulum, from its structure resembling that of a net. When the peritoneum is cut, as usual, and the cavity of the abdomen laid open, the omentum or cawl presents itself first to view. This membrane, which is like a wide and empty bag, covers the greatest part of the guts. Quincy.

OMER. n. f. A Hebrew measure about three pints and a half English. Bailey.

TO OMIMATE. v. a. [ominor, Latin.]

This omimates sadly, as to our divisions with the Romans. Decay of Piety.

OMINATION. n. f. [from ominor, Lat.] Prognostick.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement of ill luck, yet the same was not a general prognostick of future evil among the ancients; but a particular omination concerning the breach of friendship. Brown.

OMINOUS. adj. [from omen.]

1. Exhibiting bad tokens of faturity;
foreboding ill; inauspicious.

Let me be duke of Clarence;

For Gloster's dukedom is ominous. Shakspere.

Pomfret, thou bloody prison,

Fatal and ominous to noble peers. Shakspere.

These accidents, the more rarely they happen, the more ominous are they esteem'd, because they are never observed but when sad events do ensue.

Maynard.

Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,
He last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.

As in the heathen worship of God, a sacrifice without an heart was accounted ominous, so in the christian worship of him, an heart without a sacrifice is worthless. Scutb.

Pardon a father's tears,
And give them to Charinus' memory;
May they not prove as ominous to thee! Dryden.

2. Exhibiting tokens good or ill.

Though he had a good ominous name to have made a peace, nothing followed. Racon's Hen. VII.

It brave to him, and ominous does appear,

To be oppos'd at first, and conquer here. Country.

The quality of being ominous.

OMISSION. n. f. [omissus, Latin.]

1. Neglect to do something; forbearance of something to be done.

Whilst they were held back purely by doubts and scruples, and want of knowledge without their own faults, their omission was fit to be conniv'd at.

Kittellwell.

If he has made no provision for this change, the omission can never be repaired, the time never redeemed. Rogers.

2. Neglect of duty, opposed to commission or perpetration of crimes.

Omission to do what is necessary,

Seals a commission to a blank of danger. Shaksp.

The most natural division of all offences, is into those of omission and those of commission. Addison.

TO OMIT. v. a. [omitto, Lat.]

1. To leave out; not to mention.

These personal comparisons I omit, because I would say nothing that may favour of a spirit of flattery. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd,

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare The Scipios' worth? Dryden.

2. To neglect to practise.

Her father omitted nothing in her education, that might make her the most accomplished woman of her age. Addison.

OMITTANCE. n. f. [from omit.] Forbearance. Not in use.

He said, mine eyes were black, and my hair black.

And now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me!
I marvel why I answer'd not again;
But that's all one, omittance is no quittance.

Shakespeare.

OMNIPARIOUS. adj. [omnifariam, Lat.]
Of all varieties or kinds.

These particles could never of themselves, by omnifarious kinds of motion, whether fortuitous or mechanical, have fallen into this visible system.

Bentley.

But if thou omnifarious drinks wou'dst brew;
In sides the orchard, ev'ry hedge and bush Affords assist me.

OMNIFEROUS. adj. [omnis and fero, Lat.] Allbearing.

DiD.

Consisting of all kind.

DiD.

OMNIPARITY. n. f. [omnis and par,
Latin.] General equality.

Their own working heads affect, without commandment of the word, to wit, omniparity of churchmen.

White.

OMNIPOTENCE. } n. f. [omnipotentia, OMNIPOTENCY. } Latin.] Almighty power; unlimited power.

Whatever fortune

Can give or take, love wants not, or despises;
Or by his own omnipotent supplies.

Dentham.

As the soul bears the image of the divine wildom, so this part of the body represents the omni-potency of God, whilst it is able to perform such wonderful effects.

Wilkins.

The greatest danger is from the greatest power,
and that is omnipotency.

Tillotson.

How are thy servants blest, O Lord,
How sure is their defence,
Eternal wisdom is their guide,
Their help, omnipotence.

Addison.

Will omnipotence neglect to save

The suffering virtue of the wife and brave?

Pope.

OMNIPOTENT. adj. [omnipotens, Latin.] Almighty; powerful without limit; all-powerful.

You were also Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: oh omnipotent love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose!

Shakespeare.

The perfect being must needs be omnipotent, both as self-existent and as immense; for he that is self-existent, having the power of being, hath the power of all being; equal to the cause of all being, which is to be omnipotent.

Greco.

OMNIPRESENCE. n. f. [omnis and præsens, Latin.] Ubiquity; unbounded presence.

He also went

Invisible, yet staid, such privilege

Hath omnipresence.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Adam, thou know'st his omnipresence fills

Land, sea, and air.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

The soul is involved and present to every part;
and if my soul can have its effectual energy upon my body with ease with how much more facility can a being of infinite existence and omnipresence, of infinite wisdom and power, govern a great but finite universe?

Hale.

OMNIPRESENT. adj. [omnis and præsens, Latin.] Ubiquitary; present in every place.

Omniscient master, omnipresent king.

To thee, to thee, my last distress I bring.

OMNISCIENCE. } n. f. [omnis and scientia, Latin.] Bound-knowledge; infinite wisdom.

In all this misconstruction of my actions, as I have no judge but God above me, so I can have comfort to appeal to his omniscience.

Thinking by reticement to obscure himself from God, Adam infringed the omniscience and essential ubiquity of his Maker, who, as he created all things, is beyond and in them all.

Brown.

An immense being does strangely fill the soul;
and omnipotency, omniscience, and infinite goodness, enlarge the spirit while it fixly looks upon them.

Burnet.

Since thou boast'st th' omniscience of a God,
Say in what cranny of Sebastian's soul,
Unknown to me, to loath'd a crime is lodg'd?

Dryden.

OMNISCIENT. adj. [omnis and scio, Lat.] Infinitely wise; knowing without bounds; knowing every thing.

Py no means trust to your own judgment alone;
for no man is omniscient.

Bacon's Advice to Virgils.

What can scape the eye
Of God all-seeing, or deceive his heart

Omniscient?

Whatever is known, is some way present;

and that which is present, cannot but be known by him who is omniscient.

South.

It is one of the natural notions belonging to the Supreme Being, to conceive of him that he is omniscient.

Wilkins.

Omniscient master, omnipresent king,

To thee, to thee, my last distress I bring,

OMNISCIUS. adj. [omnis and scio, Lat.]

fies that which is under, that by which any thing is supported, which any thing strikes by falling, which any thing covers, or where any thing is fixed.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,

But on his knees at meditation.

Shakespeare. Rich. III.

What news?

—Richmond is on the seas.

—There let him sink, and be the seas on him.

Shakespeare.

Distracted terror knew not what was best;

On what determination to abide.

Daniel's Cle. War.

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth,
Stol on his wing my three and twentieth year.

Milton.

As some, to witness truth, Heav'n's call obey,
So some on earth must, to confirm it, stay.

They stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree.

Dryden.

On me, on me let all thy fury fall,
Nor en from me, since I deserve't all.

Pope.

their present support and future hopes depend.

Smallbridge.

8. At, noting place.

On each side her,

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling

Cupids.

Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

9. It denotes the motive or occasion of any thing.

The same prevalence of genius, the world cannot pardon your concealing, on the same consideration; because we neither have a living Varus nor a Horace.

Dryden.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory, must not be expressed like the ecstasy of a harlequin
on the receipt of a letter from his mistress.

Dryden.

The best way to be used by a father on any occasion, to reform any thing he wishes mended in his son.

Locke.

We abstain on such solemn occasions from things lawful, out of indignation that we have often gratified our lives in things unlawful.

Smallbridge.

10. It denotes the time at which any thing happens: as, this happened on the first day. On is used, I think, only before day or hour, not before denominations of longer time.

In the second month, on the twenty-seventh day.

Gemfis.

11. It is put before the object of some passion.

Compassion on the king commands me stoop.

Shakespeare.

Could tears recal him into wretched life,
Their sorrow hurts themselves; on him is lost.

Dryden.

12. In forms of denunciation it is put before the thing threatened.

Hence on thy life; the captive maid is mine,
Whom not for price or prayers I will resign.

13. Noting imprecation.

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery!

Shakespeare.

14. Noting invocation.

On thee, dear wife, in deserts all alone,
He call'd.

Dryden's King. Georg.

15. Noting the state of a thing fired.

This sense seems peculiar, and is perhaps an old corruption of a fire.

The earth shook to see the heavens on fire,
And not in fear of your nativity.

The horses burst as they stood fast tied in the stables, or by chance breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light fire.

Kneller's History of the Turks.

His fancy grows in the progress, and becomes on fire like a chariot wheel by its own rapidity.

16. Noting stipulation or condition.

I can be satisfied on more easy terms.

17. Noting distinction or opposition.

The Rhodians, on the other side, mindful of their former honour, valiantly repulsed the enemy.

18. Before it, by corruption, it stands for of.

This tempest,

Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded

The sudden breach on's.

A whirling gamester has but a poor trade on's, who fills his pockets at the price of his reputation.

Locke's Education.

19. Noting the manner of an event.

Note,

How much her mind is alter'd on the sudden.

Shak.

20. On, the same with upon. See UPON.
On. adv.

1. Forward; in succession.

As he forbore one act, so he might have forborn another, and after that another, and so on, till he had by degrees weakened, and at length mortified and extinguished the habit itself. South.

If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on. Locke.

These smaller particles are again composed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them; and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles, such as have no pores. Newton.

2. Forward; in progression.

On indeed they went; but oh! not far; A fatal stop travails'd their head-long course. Dun.

So saying, on he led his radiant hics. Milton.

My halting days fly on with full career. Milton.

Hopping and flying, thus they led him on To the slow lake. Dryden.

What kindled in the dark the vital flame, And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning stream; Blackmore on Creation.

Go to, I did not mean to chide you;

On with your tale. Rowe's Jane Shore.

3. In continuance; without ceasing.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,

Till this stormy night be gone,

And th' eternal morrow dawn. Crawford.

Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd. Dryd.

You roam about, and never are at rest;

By new desires, that is, new torments still possess:

As in a feverish dream you still drink on,

And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.

The peasants defy the sun; they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke.

4. Not off; as, he is neither on nor off; that is, he is irresolute.

5. Upon the body, as part of dress. His cloaths were neither on nor off; they were disordered. See OFF.

A long cloak he had on. Sidney.

Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,

Her patches, paint, and jewels on;

All day let envy view her face,

And Phillis is but twenty-one. Prior.

A painted vest prince Vostager had on,

Which from a naked Piet his grandfire won. Blackmore.

6. It notes resolution to advance forward; not backward.

Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead

A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;

And bravely on, till they or we, or all,

A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.

7. It is through almost all its significations opposed to off, and means approach, junction, addition, or presence.

On. interj. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for go on.

Therefore on, or strip your sword stark-naked;

for meddle you must. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Cheerly on, courageous friends,

To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,

By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakespeare.

On then, my muse! and fools and knaves expose,

And, since thou can't not make a friend, make foes. Young.

Once. adv. [from one.]

1. One time.

Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but once in two years; the cause is, the expence of sap. Bacon.

Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,

And after him the surer messenger,

A dove, sent forth once and again to spy

Green trees or ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Once every morn he march'd, and once at night.

You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.

O virgin! daughter of eternal night, Give me this once thy labour to sustain My right, and execute my just disdain. Dryden.

In your tuneful lays,

Once more resound the great Apollo's praise. Pope.

2. A single time.

Who this heir is, he does not once tell us. Locke.

3. The same time.

At once with him they rose;

Their rising all at once was as the sound

Of thunder heard remote. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fix'd with this thought, at once he stain'd the breast,

And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.

4. At a point of time indivisible.

Night came on, not by degrees prepar'd,

But all at once; at once the winds arise,

The thunders roll. Dryden's Cimon and Iphigeneia.

Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense distance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is dilated by refraction, may appear from hence, that when the moon passes over and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

5. One time, though no more.

Fuscinus, those ill deeds that fully fame,

In blood once tainted, like a current run

From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.

6. At the time immediate.

This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Asterbury.

7. Formerly; at a former time.

Thereon his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,

Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee,

But hence 'tis gone. Addison.

8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective:

as, this once, that once.

ONE. adj. [an, one, Saxon; een, Dutch;

ein, German; is, Greek.]

1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unit.

The man he knew was one that willingly

For one good look would hazard all, Daniel.

Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, ac-knowledge'd also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.

Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,

And from those parts sum one collected grace;

Then when you have refin'd to that degree,

Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryd.

2. Indefinitely; any; some one.

We shall

Present our services to a fine new prince,

One of these days. Shakespeare.

I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee

each hour

One thing or other. Shakespeare's Tempest.

3. It is added to any.

When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matth. xiii. 19.

If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it. Suckling.

4. Different; diverse: opposed to another.

What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes? Shakespeare.

It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable;

and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryd.

Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.

It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.

My legs were closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Addison.

There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smallbridge.

Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot.

At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifles them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

5. One of two opposed to the other.

Ask from the wide side of heaven unto the other,

whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deuteronomy, iv. 32.

Both the matter of the stone and marchasite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.

6. Not many; the same.

The church is therefore one, though the members may be many; because they all agree in one faith.

There is one Lord and one faith, and that truth once delivered to the saints; which whosoever shall receive, embrace, and profess, must necessarily be accounted one in reference to that profession: for if a company of believers become a church by believing, they must also become one church by believing one truth. Pearson.

7. Particularly one.

One day when Phæbe fair,

With all her band, was following the chase,

This nymph quite tur'd with heat of scorching air,

Sat down to rest. Spenser.

One day, in turning some uncultur'd ground,

In hopes a free-stone quarry might be found,

His mattock met resistance, and behold,

A casket burst, with diamonds fill'd and gold, Harte.

8. Some future.

Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above

Shall one day faint, and then swift motion stay;

And time itself, in time shall cease to move,

But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.

ONE. n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate

it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective, the substantive being understood.]

1. A single person.

If one by one we wedded all the world,

She you killed would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.

Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfect one of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hocher.

From his lofty steed he flew,

And raising one by one the suppliant crew,

To comfort each. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

If one must be rejected, one succeed,

Make him my lord, within whose faithful breast

Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.

When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,

Descends to view the miser humble seat. Granville.

2. A single mass or aggregate.

It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.

3. The first hour.

Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom

Let us not forget. Shakespeare.

4. The same thing.

I answer'd not again;

But that's all one. Shakespeare.

To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one, as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.

5. A person, indefinitely and loose.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts.

6. A person, by way of eminence.

Ferdinand

My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shakespeare.

7. A distinct or particular person.

That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.

No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other.

Bacon's Holy War.

The obedience of the one to the call of grace, when the other, supposed to have sufficient, if not an equal measure, obeys not, may reasonably be imputed to the humble, malleable, melting temper.

Hammond.

One or other sees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends.

8. Persons united.

As I have made ye one, lords, one remain.

So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Shakespeare.

9. Concord; agreement; one mind.

The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep them at one within themselves. Bacon.

He is not at one with himself what account to give of it. Tillotson.

10. [On, l'on, French.] It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men: as, they live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Afcham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how ] Any person; any man indefinitely.

It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Aeneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Liana is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease, affluence, and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Atterbury.

For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot on Aliments.

For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment. Baker.

11. A person of particular character.

Then must you speak

Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous, but being wrought
Perplexed in the extreme. Shakespeare's Othello.

With lives and fortunes trusting one
Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.

Edward I. was one who very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hob.

One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.

Forgive me, if the title I afford
To one, whom nature meant to be a lord. Hart.

12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.

Does the son receive a natural life? The subject enjoys a civil one: that's but the matter, this the form. Holyday.

These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood. Glenn.

He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tillotson.

The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Atterbury.

There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison.

Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison's Freeholder.

This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears, the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.

13. One another, is a mode of speech very frequent; as, they love one another; that is, one of them loves another: the storm beats the trees against one another; that is, one against another.

In democratical governments, war did commonly unite the minds of men; when they had enemies abroad, they did not contend with one another at home. Davenant.

ONE berry. n. s. [aconitum, Latin.]

Wulf'sbane, or monk'sbane.

ONE ED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The oney'd hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The mighty family

Of oney'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.

ONIROCRITICAL. adj. [insonia, Greek, Gr. onirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocritical and onirocritick.] Interpretative of dreams.

If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in a new kind of observation which may oney'd correspond has directed him to make. Addison's Spectator.

ONEIROCRITICK. n. s. [onirocritique, Gr.]

An interpreter of dreams.

All who deserve his love, he makes his own; And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryden.

The practice of virtue is attended not only with present quiet and satisfaction, but with comfortable hope of a future recompence. Nelson.

Not must this condition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils, but when we live the best. Wake.

2. So and no otherwise.

Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Genesis, vi. 5.

3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.

ONOMANCY. n. s. [onoma and manthia.]

Divination by a name.

Destinies were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were insitible, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Cumden.

ONOMANTICAL. adj. [onoma and manthia.]

Predicting by names.

Theodotus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wisard Jew, willed him to shut up a number of twine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to leave them. Cumden.

ONSET. n. s. [on and set]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still,
As he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney.

All breathless, wray, faint,

Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,

And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,

Struck him to hugely, that through great constraint

He made him stoop. Spenser.

The shout

Of battle now began, and rushing found

Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off, yet still it renews the onset, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obstinate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onset of an invasion. Addison.

Observe

The first impetuous onset of his grief;

Use every artifice to keep him steady. Philips.

Homer opens his poem with the utmost simplicity and modesty; he continually grows upon the reader. Notes on Odyssey.

To OPE. } v. n.
To O'PEN. }

1. To unclofe itself; not to remain shut; not to continue closed

The hundred doors
Ope of themselves; a rushing whirlwind roars
Within the cave. Dryden's Æneid.
Unnumber'd treasures ope at once,
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. To bark. A term of hunting.
If I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me
When I open oga n. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

ledge; dawn.

God has been pleas'd to dissipate this confusion and chaos, and to give us some openings, some dawnings of liberty and settlement. South's Sermons.
The opening of your glory was like that of light;
you shone to us from afar, and disclosed your first beams on distant nations. Dryden.

O'PENLY. adv. [from open.]

1. Publickly; not secretly; in sight; not obscurely.

Their actions, always spoken of with great honour, are now called openly into question. Hooker.
Prayers are faulty, not whensoever they be openly made, but when hypocrisy is the cause of open praying. Hooker.
Why should you put me to deny
This claim which now you wear so openly? Shakefp.

I knew the time,

Now full, that I no more should have obscure,
But openly begin, as best becomes
The authority which I deriv'd from heav'n. Milton.
How grossly and openly do many of us contradict the precepts of the gospel, by our ungodliness and worldly lusts. Tillotson.

We express our thanks by openly owning our parentage, and paying our common devotions to God on this day's solemnity. Atterbury.

2. Plainly; apparently; evidently; without disguise.

Darrah
Too openly does love and hatred show;
A bounteous master, but a deadly foe. Dryden.
OPENMOUTH'ED. adj. [open and mouth.]

ship, will prove what were my real sentiments.
Pope's Letters.

O'PERA. n. f. [Italian.]

An opera is a poetical tale or fiction, presented by vocal and instrumental music, adorned with scenes, machines, and dancing. Dryden.
You will hear what plays were acted that week,
which is the finest song in the opera. Leav.

O'PERABLE. adj. [from operor, Latin.]

To be done; practicable. Not in use.

Being incapable of operable circumstances, or rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and therefore condemn or cry up the whole proposition. Brown.

O'PERANT. adj. [operant, Fr.] Active;

having power to produce any effect.
A word not in use, though elegant.

Earth, yield me roots!
Who seeks far better of thee, sauce his palate
With thy most operant poison. Shakespeare's Timon.
I must leave thee, love, and shortly too;
My operant powers their functions leave to do.
Shakespeare.

To O'PERATE. v. n. [operor, Latin;

operer, Fr.] To act; to have agency;
to produce effects; with on before the subject of operation.

The virtues of private persons operate but on a few; their sphere of action is narrow, and their influence is confined to it. Atterbury.

Bodies produce ideas in us, manifestly by impulse, the only way which we can conceive bodies operate in. Locke.

It can operate on the guts and stomach, and thereby produce distinct ideas. Locke.

A plain convincing reason operates on the mind both of a learned and ignorant hearer as long as they live. Swift.

Where causes operate freely, with a liberty of indifference to this or the contrary, the effect will be contingent, and the certain knowledge of it belongs only to God. Watts.

OPERATION. n. f. [operatio, Latin; operation, Fr.]

1. Agency; production of effects; influence.

There are in men operations natural, rational, supernatural, some political, some finally ecclesiastical. Hooker.

By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakespeare.

All

All operations by transmission of spirits, and imagination, work at distance, and not at touch.

Bacon's Natural History.

Knowledge of good and ill, thins to taste. Milton.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit.

Boyle.

Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes; for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works. Dryden.

The pain and sickness caused by manna, are the effects of its operation on the stomach and guts by the size, motion, and figure of its insensible parts. Locke.

2. Action; effect. This is often confounded with the former sense.

Repentance and renovation consist not in the life, wish, or purpose, but in the actual operations of good life. Hammond.

Many medicinal drugs of rare operation. Heylyn.

That false fruit

Far other operation first display'd, Carnal desire inflaming. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The offices appointed, and the powers exercised in the church, by their institution and operation are holy. Pearson.

In this understanding piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth, and softness. But these qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

3. [In chirurgery.] The part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.

OPERATIVE. adj. [from operate.] Having the power of acting; having forcible agency; active; vigorous; efficacious.

To be over-curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who, not contented with a known Ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths. Raleigh.

Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty; and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison less operative upon others. Clarendon.

In actions of religion we should be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life. Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality, in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward. South.

The will is the conclusion of an operative syllogism. Norris.

OPERATOR. n. s. [opérateur, French; from operate.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.

An imaginary operator opening the first with a great deal of nicety, upon a cursory view it appeared like the head of another. Addison's Spectator.

To administer this dose, there cannot be fewer than fifty thousand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty. Swift.

OPEROSUS. adj. [operosus, Latin.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediousness.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and also very operose; they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the usage was to cease, as they were at first to procure it. Bannet.

Written language, as it is more operous, so it is more digested, and is permanent. Holder.

OPHIOPHAGOUS. adj. [ὄφις and φαγέω.] Serpenteating. Not used.

All snakes are not of such poisonous qualities as common opinion presumeth; as is confirmable from ophiophagus nations, and such as feed upon serpents. Brown.

OPHITES. n. s. A stone resembling a serpent.

Ophtus has a dusky greenish ground, with spots of a lighter green, oblong, and usually near square. Woodward.

OPIFICER. n. s. [opifex, Latin.] One that performs any work; artist. A word not received.

There is an infinite distance betwixt the poor mortal artist, and the almighty opificer. Bentley.

OPINABLE. adj. [opinar, Latin.] Which may be thought. Ditt.

OPINATION. n. s. [opinar, Lat.] Opinion; notion. Ditt.

OPINATOR. n. s. [opinar, Lat.] One who holds an opinion.

Consider against what kind of opinators the reason above given is levelled. Hall.

To OPIN. v. n. [opinar, Lat.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.

Fear is an ague, that forsakes
And haunts by fits those whom it takes;
And they'll opine they feel the pain
And blows they felt to-day, again. Hudibras.

In matters of mere speculation, it is not material to the welfare of government, or themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no. South.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
Deephid the shining mischief under ground. Pope.

OPINATIVE. adj. [from opinion.]

1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.

2. Imagined; not proved.

It is difficult to find out truth, because it is but such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opiniative uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold. Glenville.

OPINIATOR. n. s. [opiniatre, French.]

One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.

What will not opiniators and self believing men dispute of and shake doubt of? Rivington.

Life's left for Robert, Governor; a man of a four and forty name, a great opiniator, and one who must be over one before he would believe that he could be so. Clarendon.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such foolish opiniators should. South.

OPINIATRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn.

Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opiniatre in discourse, and plying himself in contradicting others. Locke.

OPINIATRETY. n. s. [opiniatreté, Fr.]

OPINIATRY. n. s. Obstinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness. This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Left popular opiniatry should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The one lets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry. Locke on Education.

So much as we ourselves comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, makes us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true; what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry. Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry, and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing.

Woodward's Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so. Pope.

OPINION. n. s. [opinion, French; opinio, Latin.]

1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.

Opinion is a light, vain, crude, and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the tincture of reason. Ben Jonson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting. Hall.

Time wears out the fictions of opinion, and doth by degrees discover and unmask that fallacy of ungrounded persuasions, but confirms the distinctions and sentiments of nature. Hutcheson.

Bless be the princes who have fought
For pompous names, or wide dominions,
Since by their error we are taught,
That happiness is but opinion. Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.

Where no such settled customs hath made it law, then it hath force only according to the strength of reason and circumstances joined with it, or as it shews the opinion and judgment of them that made it; but not at all as if it had any commanding power of obedience. Selden.

Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here?

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir.

Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God, without omnipresence.

Locke.

A story that Bacon sufficiently shews us the opinion that an author entertained of the cri-

Addison.

3. Favourable judgment.

In actions of arms small matters are of great moment, especially when they tend to raise an opinion of command.

Hayward.

However I have no opinion of those things; yet so much I conceive to be true, that strong imagination hath more force upon things living, than things merely inanimate.

Bacon.

If a woman had no opinion of her own person and dress, she would never be angry at those who are of the opinion with herself.

Lavo.

OPINION. v. a. [from the noun.] To opine; to think. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The Stoicks opined the soul of man dwelt about the moon, and those of fools who dwelt about the earth; whereas the Epicureans held nothing after death.

Brown.

That the soul and the angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, is generally opinioned.

Glanville.

OPINIONATIVE. adj. [from opinion] Fond of preconceived notions; stubborn.

Striking at the root of pedantry and opinionative assurance, would be no hindrance to the world's improvement.

Glanville.

One would rather chuse a reader, without art, than one ill instructed with learning, but opinionative and without judgment.

Burnet.

OPINIONATIVELY. adv. [from opinionative.] Stubbornly.

OPITULATION. n. f. [opitulation, Latin.] An aiding; a helping.

OPIMUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the resinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry; its colour is a dark brownish yellow, its smell is of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid. It is brought from Natolia, Egypt, and the East-Indies, produced from the white garden poppy; with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green, and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid confidence. The finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. What we generally have is the mere crude juice, worked with water, or honey sufficient to give it into form. Externally applied it is emollient, relaxing, and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram, but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful; it removes melancholy, and dissipates the dread of danger; the Turks always take it when they are going to battle; it afterwards quiets the spirit, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on drunkenness, cheerfulness, and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustom ed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are apt to be faint, idle, and thoughtless; they lose their appetite, and grow old before their time.

Sleep hath forsok and given me o'er To death's benumbing opium as my only cure.

Mil.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, more powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies.

Locke.

OPULENCE. n. f. [opulus, ople, and tree.] A sort of tree.

Ainsworth.

OPUSALSAMUM. n. f. [Latin.] Balm of Gilead.

OPPONAX. n. f. [Latin.] A gum resin in small loose granules, and sometimes in large masses, of a strong disagreeable smell, and an acid and extremely bitter taste, brought to us from the East, and known to the Greeks; but we are entirely ignorant of the plant which produces this drug.

OPPIDAN. n. f. [oppidanus, Lat.] A townsman, or inhabitant of a town.

TO OPPIGNATE. v. a. [oppignero, Latin.] To pledge; to pawn. Not in use.

OPPLET. adj. [oppletus, Latin.] Filled; crowded.

OPPOSITIVE. adj. [oppositus, Lat.] Opposite; adverse.

Ere the foundation of this earth were laid, It was opposite to our fears and our pain, That joy still sought, should never be attain'd.

Prior.

OPPOSITIVE. n. f. [oppositus, Latin.]

1. Antagonist; adversary.

2. One who begins the dispute by raising objections to a tenet, correlative to the defendant or respondent.

Inasmuch as ye go about to destroy a thing which is in force, and to draw in that which hath not as yet been received, to impose on us that which we think not ourselves bound unto; that therefore ye are not to claim in any countenance other than the plaintiffs or opponents part.

How becomingly does Philopollis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator.

OPPORTUNE. adj. [opportune, French; opportunus, Latin.] Seasonable; convenient; fit; timely; well-timed; proper.

There was nothing to be added to this great king's felicity, being at the top of all worldly bliss, and the perpetual constancy of his profane face, but an opportune death to withdraw him from any future blow of fortune.

Will lift us up in spite of fate,

Neater our ancient seat; perhaps in view

Of those bright confines, whence with neighbouring

And opportune excursion, we in y chance

Re-enter heaven.

Consider'd every creature, which of all

Most opportune might serve his wiles, and found

The serpent subtillest beast of all the field.

M. v.

OPPORTUNITY. adv. [from opportune.] Seasonably; conveniently; with opportunity either of time or place.

He was resolved to chide a war rather than to have Bretagne caused by France, being situated to opportunitly to a very England either for coast or trade.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Again I these the cause proper of action, that they off opportunitly, whereof I am therefore opportunitly induced to say somewhat.

Byrd.

OPPORTUNITY. n. f. [opportunitas, Fr. opportunitas, Latin.] Fit time; fit place; time; convenience; suitability of circumstances to any end.

A woman will make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour should be like their ap- parel, not too straight, but free for exercise.

Bacon.

Opportunity, like a sudden gust,

Hath swell'd my calmer thought into a tempest.

Accorded opportunitly

That work'd out thoughts into desires, desires

To resolutions; those being sure and quicken'd,

Thou gav'st them birth, and bring'st them forth to act on.

De Witt.

Thou their advice be good, their counsel wise,

Yet lengthen'd their opportunities.

I had an opportunity to see the clouds descend, and after it was past, to ascend again so high as to get over part of the mountain.

Leaves of the 1st of 1744.

I expect no opportunities of doing good, nor check thy desire of doing it, by a vain fear of what may happen.

Macbeth.

All poets have taken an opportunity to give long descriptions of the night.

Bacon.

TO OPPOSE. v. a. [oppos, French; oppono, Latin.]

1. To act against; to be adverse; to hinder; to resist.

There's no bottom, none

In my voluptuousness; and my desire

All continent impediments would o'erbear,

That did oppose my will.

2. To put in opposition; to offer as an antagonist or rival.

If all men are not naturally equal, I am sure all slaves are; and then I may, without presumption, oppose my single opinion to his.

Locke.

3. To place as an obstacle.

Since he stands obdurate,
And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury.
I thro' the least pin'd their evil d' race,
Engag'd the heav'n, oppos'd the stormy main;
But billows roar'd and tem, cits rag'd in vain. Dryd.

4. To place in front; to place over against.
Her grace sat down.

In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shaksp.

7. OPPOSITIVE v. n.

1. To act adversely.

A servant, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master. Shaksp. King Lear.

He practised to dispatch such of the nobility as were like to oppose against his followers in it, and in such sort to encounter and weaken it, as that they should be no impediment to him.

2. To object in a disputation; to have the part of raising difficulties against a tenet supposed to be right.

OPPOSITIVE adj. [from oppose.] Irrefutable; not to be opposed.

I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your justice, Shaksp. Macb.

OPPOSITIVE n. s. [from oppose.] One that opposes; antagonist; enemy; rival.

Now the fair goddess fortune
I all deep in love with thee, and let great charms

Mitigate thy opposite favours: bold gentleman!
Prosperity in thy page. Shaksp. Cymb.

Brave wit, that have made essays worthy of immortality, yet by reason of envy and more peculiar oppositions, have submitted to fate, and are almost lost in oblivion. Gl. Oppos.

I do not see how the monster could have continued in their stations, if their opposites had agreed about the methods by which they should be raised.

A hardy modern chief,
A bold opposer of a vine belief. Blackmore.

OPPOSITE adj. [opposite, French; oppositus, Latin.]

To the other five,
Their planetary motions and aspects,

In textile, square, time and opposites,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Adverse; repugnant.

Nothing is a foreign nature, like the rising noisy, by which the road is nudged into another sort of pleasure, opposite to that which is designed in an epic poem. Dryden.

This is a position very uneasy to the lust and passions, and opposite to the strongest desires of flesh and blood. August.

3. Contrary.

In this fallen state of man religion begins with repentance and conversion, the two opposite terms of which are God and sin.

Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite significations. Locke.

OPPOSITE n. s. Adversary; opponent; antagonist; enemy.

To the best and wisest, while they live, the world is continually a toward opposite, a curious observer of their defects and imperfections; then virtue it afterwards as much admires. Hobbes.

He is the most skilful, bloody, and fatal opposite that you could have found in Illyria. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

The knight whom fate or happy chance
Shall grace his arms so far in equal fight,
From out the bars to force his opposite,
The pure of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

OPPOSITELY adv. [from opposite.]

1. In such a situation as to face each other.

The latter pair are joined edge to edge, but not oppositely with their points downward, but upward.

Grew.

2. Adversely.

I oft have seen, when dawn was ripe to mow,
And now the dry and brittle straw did grow,
Winds from all quarters oppositely blow. May.

OPPOSITION n. s. [from opposite.] The state of being opposite.

OPPOSITION n. s. [opposition, French; oppositio, Latin.]

posed; placing over against.

2. Hostile resistance.

He
Cry'd Oh! and mournd; found no opposition
From what he look'd on should be aid. Shaksp. Henry V.

Virtue which braves the storm,
And all temptation can overcome
Most shines, and most is not perceived above. Shaksp. Henry V.

He considers himself as a man at the hazard of his own life as an enemy of himself when he took Anchitus on his shoulders, and bore him into the jaws of the lion and the tiger.

3. Contrariety of affection.

They who never find the experiment of a holy life, measure the laws of God not by their own fictitious good, but by their own reality and which they find in their own hearts. Locke.

4. Contrariety of interest; contrariety of measures.

When the church is taken for the persons making profession of the christian faith, the catholic is often raised in opposition to heretics and schismatics. Locke.

5. Contrariety of meaning; diversity of meaning.

The parts of every true opposition do always both concern the same subject, and have reference to the same thing, with otherwis they are but in their opposition, not in truth.

The use of language and custom of speech, in all authors I have met with, has gone upon this rule or maxim, that expressive terms are always to be understood in opposition only to what they are opposed to, and not in opposition to what they are not opposed to. Waterland.

6. Inconsistency.

Reason can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence to embrace what is less evident, nor allow it to entertain probably in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

TO OPPOSE v. a. [oppositus, Latin.]

1. To crush by hardship or unreasonable severity.

Her I and Judith were oppos'd together, and all that took them captives held them fast, they refused to let them go. Shaksp. Judith.

Alas! a mortal must oppose of this Whom fate has loaded with a weight of woes, Pope.

2. To overpower; to subdue.

We're not ourselves,
When nature, being oppos'd, commands the mind
To listen with the body. Shaksp. King Lear.

In blazing height of noon,
The sun oppos'd, is plung'd in thickest gloom. Shaksp. Henry V.

OPPRESSION n. s. [oppression, French, from oppress.]

1. The act of oppressing; cruelty; severity.

If thou seest the oppressions of the poor, marvel not at the matter, for he that is higher than the highest regardeth. Ecclesi.

2. The state of being oppressed; misery.

Famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression stare within thine eyes
Contempt and beggary hang upon thy back. Shaksp. Henry V.

Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression Exceeds what we expected. Shaksp. Julius Cæsar.

3. Hardship; calamity.

We are all subject to the same accidents; and when we see any under particular oppression, we should look upon it as the common lot of human nature. Addison.

4. Dulness of spirits; lassitude of body.

Dronings, oppression, heaviness, and lassitude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot.

OPPRESSIVE adj. [from oppress.]

1. Cruel; inhuman; unjustly exactious or severe.

2. Heavy; overwhelming.

Alas, teach thy friendly arm,
And help me to support that terrible frame,
That nature's strength is not sufficient to
And sink beneath its load. Romeo's Farewell.

To call the lot of one oppressive weight,
That puts a curse on it, is an emblem of a state. Pope.

OPPRESSOR n. s. [oppressor, French, from oppress.] One who harasses others with unreasonable or unjust severity.

I from oppressor did the poor defend,
The fatherless, and such as had no friend. Sidney.

The cries of orphans, and the oppressor's
Had reach'd the stars. Dryden.

Poor wretches employed to relieve the oppressed,
and to punish the oppressor, become great blessings.

OPPROBRIOUS adj. [from opprobrium,
Latin.]

1. Reproachful; disgraceful; causing infamy; scurrilous.

Thine self pronounced them blessed, that should for his name take be subject to all kinds of ignomies and opprobrious maledictions. Hobbes.

They are themselves unjustly aspersed, and vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison.

2. Blasted with infamy.

I will not here defile
My unblasted name with his opprobrious name. Dan.

Solomon he led by hand to build
His temple, and against the temple of God,
On the opposite side. Milton.

OPPROBRIOUSLY adv. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfully; scurrilously.

Think you, this little prating York
Was not incited by his tale in other,
To taunt and scorn you thus opprobriously? Shaksp.

OPPROBRIOUSNESS n. s. [from opprobrious.] Reproachfulness; scurrility.

TO OPPOSE v. a. [opponere, Latin.]

1. To oppose; to attack; to resist.

For the ecclesiastical laws of this land we are led by a great reason to observe, that ye be by no means bound to oppose them. Milton.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppose the rights of pariament. Clarendon.

If nothing can oppose his love,
And virtue envious ways can prove,
What cannot he confide to do
That brings both love and virtue too? Hudibras.

The ingredients reclude opulations, mundry the blood, and oppose putrefaction. Harvey.

OPPUGANCY n. s. [from oppugn.]

Opposition.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows, each thing meets In meet opposition. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

OPPUGNER n. s. [from oppugn.] One who opposes or attacks.

The modern and degenerate Jews be, upon the score of being the great enemies of man's free will, not causelessly esteemed the great oppugners of God's free grace. Bohn.

pressive of desire. [In grammar.]

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation to signify wishing, which is called the opta-

O'PTICAL. adj. [ὀπτικός, Greek.] Relating to the science of optics.

It seems not agreeable to what anatomists and optical writers deliver, touching the relation of the two eyes to each other. Boyle.

O'PTICIAN. n. s. [from optick.] One skilled in optics.

O'PTICK. adj. [ὀπτικός; optique, French.]

1. Visual; producing vision; subservient to vision.

May not the harmony and concord of colours arise from the proportions of the vibrations preparated through the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, as the harmony and discord of sounds arise from the proportions of the vibrations of the air? Newton's Opticks.

2. Relating to the science of vision.

Where our master handleth the contractions of pillars, we have an optick rule, that the higher they are, the less should be always their diminution abst, because the eye itself doth contract all objects, according to the distance. Watt n.

O'PTICK. n. s. An instrument of light, an organ of sight.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of eye, which were before light, and in whose opticks there is no opacity? Br own.

Our corporeal eyes we find,
Dazzle the opticks of our mind. Dennam.

You may neglect, or quench, or hate the flame,
Whose smoke too long obscure'd your rising name,
And quickly cold indifference will ensue,
When you lose's joys thro' honour's optick view. Prin.

Why has not man a microscopick eye?

For this plain reason, man is not a fly.
Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

O'PTICKS. n. s. [ὀπτικά.] The science of the nature and laws of vision.

No spherical body of what bigness soever illuminates the whole sphere of another, although it illuminate something more than half of a lesser, according unto the doctrine of opticks. Brown.

Those who desire satisfaction must go to the admirable treatise of opticks by Sir Isaac Newton.

O'PTIMACY. n. s. [optimates, Latin.] Nobility; body of nobles.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy. Howel.

O'PTIMITY. n. s. [from optimus.] The state of being best.

O'PTION. n. s. [optio, Latin.] Choice; election.

He decreed to punish the contumacy finally, by assigning them their own options. Hammond.

A transplantation must proceed from the optio of the people, else it founds like an exile, for the colonies must be raised the leave of the king, and not by his command. Bacon.

Which of these two words we will receive, he hath left to our option. Smallidge.

O'PULENCY. n. s. [opulence, Fr. opu-
lence, Latin.] Wealth;

richer; affluence.

It must be a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulency. Shakespeare.

After eight years spent in outward opulency and red murmur, that it was not greater; after masses of money and great wealth gotten, he mented. Clarendon.

He had been a person not only of great opulency, but authority. Afterbury.

There in full opulence a banker dwelt,
Who all the joys and pangs of riches felt;
His side-board glitter'd with imagin'd plate,
And his proud fancy held a vast estate. Swift.

O'PULENT. adj. [opulent, French; opu- lentus, Latin.] Rich; wealthy; affluent.

He made him his ally, and provoked a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Bacon.

To begin with the supposed policy of gratifying only the rich and opulent!—does our wife man think that the grandee whom he courts does not see through all the little plots of his courtship? South.

O'PULENTLY. adv. [from opulent.] Richly; with splendour.

OR. conjunct. [oder, Saxon.]

1. A disjunctive particle, marking distribution, and sometimes opposition.

Inquire what the ancients thought concerning this word, whether it was to perish or no; whether to be destroyed or to stand eternally? Burnet.

He my muse's homage should receive,
If I cou'd write, or Holles could forgive. Garth.

By intense study, or application to business that requires little action, the digestion of foods will soon proceed more slowly, and with more uneasiness. Blackmore.

Every thing that can be divided by the mind into two or more ideas, is called complex. Watts.

2. It corresponds to either: he must either fall or fly.

At Venice you may go to any house either by land or water. Addison.

3. It sometimes, but rather inelegantly, stands for either.

I or thy vast bounties are so numberless,
That them or to conceal, or else to tell,
Is equally impossible. Cowley.

4. Or is sometimes redundant, but is then more properly omitted.

How great soever the sins of any unreformed person are, Christ died for him because he died for all, only he must reform and forsake his sins, or else he shall never receive benefit of his death. Hammond.

5. [Or, or æne, Saxon.] Before, or ever, is by or æne. Obsolete.

Or we go to the declaration of this psalm, it shall be convenient to shew who did write this psalm. Fisher.

The dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd for whom, and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their cups,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Learn before thou speak, and use physick or or æne thou be sick. Ecclus. xviii. 19.

OR. n. s. [French.] Gold. A term of heraldry.

Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes. Philips.

O'RACH. n. s. [atreples.] There are thirteen species; garden orach was cultivated as a culinary herb, and used as spinach, though it is not generally liked by the English, but still esteemed by the French. Miller.

O'RACLE. n. s. [oracle, French, oracu- lum, Latin.]

1. Something delivered by supernatural wisdom.

The main principle whereupon our belief of all things therein contained dependeth, is, that the scriptures are the oracles of God himself. Hooker.

2. The place where, or person of whom the determinations of heaven are inquired.

Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to teach his final will,
And sends his spirit of truth henceforth to dwell,
In pious hearts, an inward oracle.

To all truth requisite for men to know. Milton.

3. Any person or place where certain decisions are obtained.

There mighty nations shall enquire their doom,
The world's great oracle in times to come. Pope.

4. One famed for wisdom; one whose determinations are not to be disputed.

To O'RACLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To utter oracles. A word not received.

No more shalt thou by oracling abuse
The gentiles. Milton.

O'RACULAR. adj. [from oracle.]

O'RACULOUS. adj. [from oracle.]

1. Uttering oracles; resembling oracles.

Thy counsel would be as the oracle of Urim and thummim, those oraculous gems
On Aaron's breast, or tongue of seers old Infallible. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Here Charles contrives the ordering of his states,
Here he resolves his neighbouring princes fates;
What nation shall have peace, where war be made,
Determin'd is in this oraculous shade. Waller.

They have something venerable and oraculous, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

Th' oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.

2. Positive; authoritative; magisterial, dogmatical.

Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements; yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are as oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glanville's Sceptics.

3. Obscure; ambiguous; like the answers of ancient oracles.

He spoke oraculous and fly,
He'd neither grant the question, nor deny. King.

O'RACULOUSLY. adv. [from oraculous.]
In manner of an oracle.

The testimonies of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examine the doctrine they delivered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
Where Jove of old oraculously spoke. Dryden.

O'RACULOUSNESS. n. s. [from oracular.]
The state of being oracular.

O'RAISON. n. s. [oraison, Fr. oratio, Lat.]

worship: more frequently written orison.
This word is pronounced short both by Shakespeare and Dryden; orison is sometimes long and sometimes short.

Stay, let's hear the oraisons he makes. Shakespeare.
Business might shorten, not disturb her pray'r;
Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share;
An active life, long oraisons forbids,
Yet still she pray'd, for still she pray'd by deeds. Dryden.

O'RAL. adj. [oral, French; os, oris, Latin.] Delivered by mouth; not written.

Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the sound that gives them life, and so not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation.
Locke on Education.

St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples,
and

and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote.

O'RALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.

Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not easily traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

O' R A N G E. n. f. [orange, French; aurantia, Lat.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.

I will discharge it in your straw-colour'd beard, your orange tawny beard. Shakespeare.

The notary came aboard, holding in his hand a fruit like an orange, but of oval or two-lobed orange tawny and scarlet, which eat a most excellent odour, and is used for a preservative against infection. Poore's New Atlante.

The ideas of orange colour and azure, produced in the mind by the same infusion of lignum nephriticum, are no less distinct ideas than those of the same colours taken from two different bodies. Locke.

Fine oranges, sauce for your veal, Are charming when squeezed in a pot of brown ale. Swift.

The Punic plant ope'd his rose-like flow'rs; The orange breath'd his aromatic powers. Haste.

O' R A N G E R Y. n. f. [orangerie, French.] Plantation of oranges.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orange-y, or artificial green house. Swift.

O' R A N G E M O S K. n. f. A species of pear.

O' R A N G E T A W N E Y. n. f. [orange and tawney] Red, resembling an orange.

Batons, or knights of Nova Scotia, are commonly distinguished from others by a ribbon of orange tawney. Holyn.

O' R A N G E W I F E. n. f. [orange and wife] A woman who sells oranges.

You wear out a good wholesome forenoon in beating a cause between an orange wife and a foetus fellow. Shakespeare.

O' R A T I O N. n. f. [oration, French; oratio, Latin.] A speech made according to the laws of rhetoric; a harangue; a declamation.

There shall I try, In my oration, how the people take The cruel issue of these bloody men. Shakespeare.

This gives life and spirit to every thing that is spoken, awakens the dullest spirits, and adds a singular grace and excellency both to the person and his oration. Wat.

O' R A T O' R I C A L. ad. [from orator.] Rhetorical; befitting an orator.

Where he speaks in an oratorical, affecting, or persuasive way, let this be explained by other places where he treats of the same theme in a doctrinal way. Watts.

O' R A T O U R. n. f. [orateur, French; orator, Latin.]

1. A public speaker; a man of eloquence.

Poor queen and son! your labour is but lost; For Warwick is a subtle orator. Shakespeare.

As when of old some orator renown'd, In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, stood in himself collected; while each part, Motion, each act, won audience. Milton.

It would be altogether vain and improper in matters belonging to an orator to pretend to strict demonstration. Wilkins.

The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point. Swift.

I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.

Both orators so much renown'd, In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.

2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.

O' R A T O R Y. n. f. [oratoria, ars, Latin.]

When my oratory grew toward end, I bid them that did love their country's good, Cry, God save Richard! Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Sighs now breath'd Unutterable, which the spirit of prayer Inspird, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight Than loudest oratory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By this kind of oratory, and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surprised. Clarendon.

Hammond's subjects were such as had greatest influence on practice, which he press'd with most affectionate tenderness, making tears part of his oratory. Fell.

The former, who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.

Come harmless characters, that no one hit, Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.

2. Exercise of eloquence.

The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antates, among which there were six armed with rostrals, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arbutnot.

3. [Oratoire, French.]

Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe's Purge-n. They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hosier.

Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor.

O R B. n. f. [orbe, French; orbis, Latin.]

1. Sphere; orbicular body.

A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central part; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial states are expanded. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Circular body.

They with a storm of darts to distance drive The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far, On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

3. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.

In the floor of heav'n There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st, But in his motion like an angel sings, Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins. Shakespeare.

4. Wheel; any rolling body.

Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the sound Of torrent floods. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Circle; line drawn round.

Does the sun learn action from the father? Yet all his activity is but in the epicycle of a family; whereas a subject's motion is in a larger orb. Hayday.

6. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.

With smiling aspect you serenely move In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.

7. Period; revolution of time.

Self-begot, self-raisd, By our own quick'ning power, when fatal course Had circled his full orb, the birth mature Of this our native heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

8. Sphere of action

Will you again unknot This churlish knot of all abhorred war, And move in that obedient orb again, Where you did give a tan and par rail light? Shakespeare.

9. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.

A drop serene hath quench'd then orb, On our confusion veil'd. Milton.

regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column, so as to form one beautiful whole, or order is a certain rule for the proportion of columns, and for the ratio which some of the parts ought to have on the count of the proportions that are given them.
There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek, viz. the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian;
and two Italian, viz. the Tuscan and Composite.
The whole is composed of two parts, at least, the column and the entablature, and of four parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the column, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts, the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.

In the Tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, call it diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two, the column with base and capital, seven; and the entablature one and three quarters.

In the Doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third of the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.

In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds, the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.

In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half; the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.

In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.

In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters. In the doric order, two and three quarters, in the ionic order, two and a quarter, in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.

Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations. Glennville's Scepis.

That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization. Locke.

To ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, French; from organ.] To contrive so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.

As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member that substance, quantity, and shape, which nature seeth most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what serveth best for their outward form. Hooker.

A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce. Ray on the Creation.

The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeing particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.

ORGANOFT. n. s. [organ and oft.] The loft where the organs stand.

Five young ladies of no small fame for their great severity of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organoft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs. Taylor.

ORGANPIPE. n. s. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.

The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe, pronounced

By means of the curious lodgment and inosulation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted. Darb.m.

OROEIS. n. f. [from oroeis, called like-wife organizing.] Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Orkney coast. Ainsworth.

ORGI'LOUS. adj. [orgueilleux, French.] Proud; haughty. Not in use.

From isles of Greece
The princes orgilous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships. Shakespeare.

OR'GIES. n. f. [orgies, French; orgia, Latin.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantick revels.

These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgies lights. B. n. Jonson.
She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And, mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led. Dryden.

OR'ICHALCH. n. f. [orichalcum, Latin.] Brass.

Not Bilbo steel, nor brass from Corinth set,
Nor costly orichalc from strange Phœnicæ,
But stich as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And th' hailing darts of heav'n beating hard. Spenser.

OR'IENT. adj. [oriens, Latin.]

1. Rising as the sun.
Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly'st
With the fix'd stars. Milton's Paradise Lost.
When fair morn orient in heav'n appear'd. Milton.

2. Eastern; oriental.
3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.

The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Ostenting double gun of happiness. Shakespeare.

There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing. Albion.

We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds; which is by the fineness of the stainer. Bacon's Natural History.

Morning light

More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white.

In thick shelter of black shades imbow'd,
He offers to each weary traveller
His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
To quench the drouth of Phœbus. Milton.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,

With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryden.

OR'IENT. n. f. [orient, French.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.

ORIENTAL. adj. [oriental, Fr.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.

Your ships wait as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pœgum upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary. Bacon.

Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent and oriental radiations. Brown.

ORIENTAL. n. f. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.

They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals. Gray.

ORIENTALISM. n. f. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

ORIENTALITY. n. f. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.

His revolution being regular, it hath no efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disfereth his beams. Br. van.

ORIFICE. n. f. [orifice, French; orificium, Lat.] Any opening or perforation.

The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopped by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days. Bacon.

Their mouths

With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide, Portending hollow truce Milton's Paradise Lost.
Ætna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice. Addison.

Blood-letting, Hippocrate's faith, should be done with broad lancers or swords, in order to make a large orifice by stabbing or punction. Abutnot.

1. Beginning; first existence.
The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.

Nature, which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself. Shakespeare.

If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original. Atterbury.

Some philosophers have placed the original of power in admiration, either of surpassing form, great valour, or superior understanding. Darwin.

Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine. Prior.

These great orbs,

Primitive founts, and origins of light. Prior.

3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated.

In this sense origin is not used.

Compare this translation with the original, the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression. Addison.

External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings. Locke.

4. Derivation; descent.

They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst,

Against the gods immortal hated nurs'd;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expelling their original from blood. Dryden.

ORIG'INAL. adj. [original, French; originalis, Lat.] Primitive; pristine; first.

The original question was, whether God hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?

Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued. Wake.

You fill, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The stock of beauty Justin d'or for the rice;
Kind nature forming them, the pattern took,
From heaven's first work, and Eve's original look. Prior.

ORIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]

1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause; from the beginning.

A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood. Bacon.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring unto the fruition of himself. Pearson.

A present blessing upon our faith, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smallidge.

2. At first.

The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata. Woodward.

3. As the first author.

For what originally others writ,
May be to well disguis'd and to improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours. Reichmann.

ORIG'INALNESS. n. f. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.

ORIGINARY. adj. [originaire, French; from origin.]

1. Productive; causing existence.

The production of animals in the originary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence. Cheyne.

2. Primitive; that which was the first state.

Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my originary dust. Sandys on Job.

OR'IGINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.

TO ORIGINATE. v. n. To take existence.

ORIGINATION. n. f. [originatio, Latin; from originate.]

1. The act or mode of bringing into existence; first production.

The tradition of the originatio of mankind seems to be universal, but the particular methods of that originatio exagitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale.

This eruca is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common originatio of all caterpillars. Ray.

Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the originatio of the universe from mechanical principles. Kail.

2. Descent from a primitive.

The Greek word used by the apostles to express the church, signifieth, a calling forth, if we look upon the originatio. Pearson.

ORISONS. n. f. [oraison, French. This word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Crashaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.

Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all my sins remember'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons gainst this poor wretch. Shakespeare.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung. Bacon's Henry VII.

My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early Larks shrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity. Crashaw.

His daily orisons attract our ears. Sandys on Job.

Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid. Milton.

So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wife ones. Cassan.

Here at dead of night
The hermit sat, mid his orisons, hears Aghast the voice of time-disparting towers. Dryden.

H h 2

The midnight clock attests my fervent pray'rs,
The rising sun my visions declares. Hart.

O'LOP. n. f. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck. Skinner.

A small ship of the king's called the Pensie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland, wherein the Pensie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's overloop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken. Hayward.

ORNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Latin; ornement, French.]

1. Embellishment; decoration.

So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornaments. Shakspeare.

2. Something that embellishes.

Ivorie, wrought in ornaments to decke the cheekes of horse. Chapman.

The Tuscan chief to me has sent Their crown, and ev'ry regal ornament. Dryden.

No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession. Rogers.

3. Honour; that which confers dignity.

They are abused and injured, and betrayed from their only perfection, whenever they are taught, that any thing is an ornament in them, that is not an ornament in the wisest amongst mankind. Law.

The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure. Addison.

ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.]

Serving to decoration; giving embellishment.

Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles. Brown.

If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects, that they may hereafter be amended? Dryden.

Even the Heathens have esteemed this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the Creator. Woodward.

If no advancement or knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere. Swift on Religion.

ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.

ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.] Embellished; bedecked. This is, I think, a word of late introduction, not very elegant.

ORNATE. adj. [ornatus, Latin.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.

What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,

That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing? Milton's Agonistes.

ORPHAN. n. f. [orphanos; orphelin, Fr.] One who has lost father or mother.

Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch sent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man. Spenser.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To leave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wailing the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakspeare.

Sad widows, by thee rised, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.

The sea with spoils his angry bullets strow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.

Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.

Collections were made for the relief of the poor, whether widows or orphans. Nelson.

ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, French.] Bereft of parents.

This king, left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government, that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney.

ORPHANAGE. n. f. [orphelinage, French.]

ORPHANISM. [from orphan.] State of an orphan.

ORPIMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, French.]

True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking: Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl. Hill.

For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brass in the yellow alchymy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.

ORPHANTROPHY. n. f. [orphanos; and trope.] An hospital for orphans.

ORPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr. telephon, Lat.] Liver or rose root, amacampheros, Telephum, or Rhodia radis. A plant. Miller.

Cool violets and orpin growing still,
Embathe'd balm and cheerful galingale. Spenser.

ORRERY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies. It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery: by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.

The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf, neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.

ORRIS. n. f. [old French.] A sort of gold or silver lace.

ORTS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing; by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment. In Anglo Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends, for ords and ends, signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came orts.] Refuse; things left or thrown away. Obsolete.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject arts and imitations. Shakspeare.
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diordne. Shakspeare.

Much good do't you then;
Brave pluff and velvet men
Can feed on orts, and safe in your stage-cloths,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The staggers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben Jonson.

ORTHODOX. adj. [orthos; and doxis.]

ORTHODOXAL. adj. [orthodox, French.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical. Orthodoxal is not used.

Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England, which is as sound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world. Bacon.

An uniform profession of one and the same orthodox verity, which was once given to the saints in the holy Apostles days. White.

Eternal bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hammond.

Origen and the two Clemens's, their works were originally orthodox, but had been afterwards corrupted, and interpolated by heretics in some parts of them. Waterland.

ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.

ORTHODOXY. n. f. [orthodoxia; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.] Soundness in opinion and doctrine.

Basil himself bears full and clear testimony to Gregory's orthodoxy. Waterland.

I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the Christian religion; since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.

ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from orthos; and dromos.] The art of sailing in the arc of some great circle, which is the shortest straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.

O'SPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from offfraga, Lat.] The sea-eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hannor.

I think he'll be to Rome, As is the ospray to the fish, who takes it By sovereignty of nature. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the offfraga, and the ospray. Numbers, xi. 13.

O'SSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.

O'SSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.

There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles fixt to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder.

OSSI'FICK. adj. [ossa and facio, Latin.] Having the power of making bones, or changing caraceous or membranous to bony substance.

If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossific faculty, to thrust out callus, and make separation of its caries. Wifman.

OSSIFICATION. n. f. [from ossify.] Change of caraceous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.

Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.

OSSI'FRAGE. n. f. [offfraga, Latin; offfragus, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The offfraga or ospray, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion

that the Latins call it avis bustaria. See OSPRAY. Calmer.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair ostents of love As shall conveniently become you there. Shakespeare.

3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.

To stirre our scales up, that admir'd, whereof a fact to cleane

Of all ill as our sacrifice, so fearful an ostent Should be the issue. Chapman.

Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent, For counsel to his father Faunus went; And sought the shades renown'd for prophecy, Which near Alburnia's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.

OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentation, Fr. ostentatio, Latin.]

1. Outward show; appearance.

If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volcians? —

—March on my fellows, Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

You are come A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented The ostentation of our loves. Shakespeare.

2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show.

This is the usual sense.

If all these secret springs of detraction still, yet a vain ostentation of wit lets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison's Spectator.

He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: 'Take heed, says he, that you do not your' alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.

With all her lustre, now, her lover warns; Then out of ostentation, hides her charms. Young.

The great end of the art is to strike the imagination. The painter is therefore to make no ostentation of the means by which this is done; the spectator is only to feel the result in his bosom. Reynolds.

3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.

The king would have one present the princes with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, an tick, or firework. Shakespeare.

OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostento, Lat.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.

Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyric, is yet the best. Dryden.

They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Broomer.
OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.

OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.

OSTEOCOLLA. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόλλα; ostecolle, Fr.] Osteocolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones. Hill's Mat. Med.

Osteocolla is a spar, generally coarse, concreted with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incrustated upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.

OSTEOCOPE. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόπε; osteo-cope, French.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Dict.

OSTEOLOGY. n. f. [ὀστέον and λογία; osteo-logia, French.] A description of the bones.

Richard Farloe, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in ostology, has now laid by that practice. Taiter.

OSTIARY. n. f. [ostium, Latin.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.

It is received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaris, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea. Brown.

OSTLER. n. f. [hostelier, French.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn. The smith, the ostler, and the boot catcher, ought to partake. Swift's Directions to the Groom.

OSTLERY. n. f. [hostelerie, French.] The place belonging to the ostler.

OSTRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; public censure.

Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.

Public envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridge to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Essays.

Hyperbolus by suffering did reduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

Thus man, upon a flight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

OSTRACITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state.

Hill's Materia Medica.

OSTRICH. n. f. [ostruche, French; struthio, Lat.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are red of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmer.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shakespeare.

Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich? Job, xxxix.
The Scots knights errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Claaveland.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks, in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbutnot.

OTACOUSTICK. n. f. [ὠτα and αὐξω; otacoustique, French.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew's Cosmol.

O'THER. pron. [oðer, Saxon; autre, French.]

1. Not the same; not this; different. In this sense it seems an adjective, yet in the plural, when the substantive is suppressed, it has, contrarily to the nature of adjectives, a plural termination: as, of last week three days were fair, the others rainy.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd That tury have don't?—
—Who dares receive it other? Shakespeare.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches, with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Knolles.

He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition, and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Lacks.

No leases shall ever be made other than leases for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Swift.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else: in this sense it is a substantive, and has a genitive and plural.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shakespeare.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art; as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon.

The confusion arises, when the one will put their sickle into the other's harvest. Leffly.

Never allow yourselves to be idle, whilst others are in want of any thing that your hands can make for them. Laws.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how we'll. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Philippians, ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could'st she thee survive. Dryden.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke.

6. The next.

Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

7. The third part.

Blind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday?
No, nor th' other day. Bun Jonson.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insistent. Glanville.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

If Sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shakespeare.

OTHERGUISE. adv. [other and guise.] This is often pronounced and sometimes written othergues.] Of another kind.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hooker.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In a different manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise; which no man denieth. Hooker.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing; they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hooker.

The evidences for such things are not so infallible, but that there is a possibility that the things may be otherwise. Wilkins.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Spratt.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison's Cato.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hooker.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention, and engage their love. Rogers.

OTTER. n. f. [otter, Saxon; lutra, Lat.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane.

as in the bevir; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canin; and in his tail, which is fellin, or a long taper; so that he may not be unduly called puerens aquaticus, or the water polecat. He makes himself burrows on the water-side, as a bevir; is sometimes tamed, and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes, to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison's Spectator.

Would you preserve a num'rous hanny race?
Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase;
Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores. Gay.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, French; ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in an oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,
Does in an oval orbit circling run;
But rarely is the object of our sight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore.

OVAL. n. s.
A triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts's Logic.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomson.

OVARY. n. s. [ovaire, French; ovarium, Latin.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part, where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and invetted. Brown.

OVARION. n. s. [ovation, French; ovatio, Latin.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much bloodshed, or defeated some less formidable enemy. Dia.

OVAT. n. s. [cruca pileosa, Latin.] A OVUST. sort of caterpillar; an insect. Dia.

OUCH. n. s. An ornament of gold or jewels.

Oucher or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Bacon.

OUCH of a boar. The blow given by a boar's tusk. Ainsworth.

OVEN. n. s. [open, Saxon.] An arched cavity heated with fire to bake bread.

He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,
And from his wild devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

Here's yet in the world hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shakespeare.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

OVER hath a double signification in the names of places, according to the different situations of them. If the place be upon or near a river, it comes from the Saxon open, a brink or bank: but if there is in the neighbourhood another of the same name, distinguished by the addition of nother, then over is from the Gothick ufar, above. Gibson's Camd.

OVER. prep. [ufar, Gothick; open, Saxon.]

1. Above, with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, or other some can be!

Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she. Shak.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest;

Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest. Dryden.

High over all, was your great conduct shown,

You fought our safety, but forgot your own. Dryd.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Pope.

It will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has over the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority. Opposed to under.

The church has over her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not over, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place. Opposed to below.

He was more than over shoes in love. Shakespeare.

The street should see as the walkt over head. Shak.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,

Beneath the level of all care,

Over whose heads those arrows fly,

Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

4. Across; from side to side: as, he leaped over the brook.

Come o'er the brook Bessy to me,

She dares not come over to thee. Shakespeare.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Aven-us, poison birds which fly over them. Bacon.

The greeks fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms

Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms. Dryden.

5. Through; diffusively.

All the world over, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were signally destroyed. Hammond.

6. Upon.

Wise governors have as great a watch over fame, as they have of the actions and designs. Bac.

Angelic quires

Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory

Over temptation and the tempter proud. Milton.

7. Before. This is only used in over night.

On their intended journey to proceed,

And over night whatso thereto did need. Hulberd.

8. It is in all senses written by contraction o'er.

OVER. adv.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all over, like an hairy garment. Genesis.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Solinian pausing upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something over, suffered himself to be intreated. Knollys.

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears

To sit and taste, till this meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner soonly answerable to God or his vicerent. Taylor.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;

With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,

For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,

Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shakespeare.

Let them argue over all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South's Sermons.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him,

'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness. Shakespeare.

Sitting or standing still confin'd to roar,

In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gazing at the sight,

Devour her o'er and o'er with vail delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,

My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:

O kill not all my kindred o'er again,

Nor tempt the dangers of the duty plain;

But in this row'r, for our defence, remain. Dryd.

When children forget, or do an action awkwardly, make them do it over and over again, till they are perfect. Locke.

If this miracle of Christ's rising from the dead, be not sufficient to convince a resolved libertine, neither would the rising of one new from the dead be sufficient for that purpose; since it would only be the doing that over again which hath been done already. Atterbury.

The most learned will never find occasion to act over again what is fabled of Alexander the Great, that when he had conquered the eastern world, he wept for want of more worlds to conquer. Watts.

He cramm'd his pockets with the precious store,
And ev'ry night review'd it o'er and o'er. Harte.

12. Over against. Opposite; regarding in front.

In Ticinum is a church with windows only from above. It repeateth the voice thirteen times, if you stand by the close end of the wall, over against the door. Bacon.

I visit his picture, and place myself over against it whole hours together. Addison's Spectator.

Over against this church stands a large hospital, erected by a thiemakur. Addison on Italy.

13. To give over. To cease from.

Their when they praise, the world believes no more,

Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er. Pope.

14. To give over. To attempt to help no longer: as, his physicians have given him over; his friends who advised him, have given him over.

15. In composition it has a great variety of significations; it is arbitrarily prefixed to nouns, adjectives, or other parts of speech in a sense equivalent to more than enough; too much.

Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath fought to win me Into his pow'r; and modest wisdom plucks me From over-credulous haste. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw a satyr, but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or overboldly affirm. Pembroke

These over-busy spirits, whose labour is their only reward, hunt a shadow and chase the wind. Disney of Poetry.

If the ferment of the breast be vigorous, an over-fermentation in the part productively a phlegmon. Wifeman.

A gangrene doth arise in phlegmons, through the unfeasonable application of over-cold medicaments. Wifeman.

Poets, like lovers, should be bold and dare; They spoil their business with an over-care; And he who servilely creeps after sense, Is safe, but ne'er will reach an excellence. Dryden.

Wretched man o'erfeels His cram'd desires with more than nature needs. Dryden.

Bending o'er the cup, the tears she shed, Serr'd by the posture to discharge her head, O'er-fill'd before. Dryden's Boocce.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own cause, their flattery is hardest to be discovered: for who would imagine himself guilty of putting tricks upon himself? Collier.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our short-sightedness. Locke.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another of cases and genders. Locke.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fondness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments. Locke.

A grown person suiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural. Locke.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break. Martineau.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby mutilate and grow tired of a partial subject. Watt.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas; one idea effaces another. An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful. Watt.

To OVER-ABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil, So much does fruitful moisture o'er-abound. Philips.

Thisague fit of fear is over-blown, An easy task it is to win our own. Shakespeare.

Seiz'd with secret joy, When storms are over-blown. Dryden's Virgil.

To OVER-BLOW. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Some angel that beholds her there, Instruct us to record what she was here; And when this cloud of sorrow's over-blown, Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known. Waller.

OVER-BOARD. adv. [over and board.] See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue. Howell.

A merchant having a vessel richly freighted at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board. South.

The trembling dotard to the deck he drew, And hoisted up and over-board he threw; This done, he seiz'd the helm. Dryden.

He obtained liberty to give them only one day before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea. L'Estrange.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement; the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board. Arbutnot.

To OVER-BULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride.

In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

To OVER-BURDEN. v. a. [over and burden.] To load with too great weight.

If the were not cloyed with his company, and that the thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief. Sidney.

To OVER-BUY. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wile,
Who slight's not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies. Dryden.

To OVER-CARRY. v. a. [over and carry.]

To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was left easy to be overcarried by ambition. Hayward.

To OVER-CAST. v. a. part. over cast. [over and cast.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

As they pass,
The day with clouds was sudden over-cast. Spenser.
The Robin, over-cast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth. Raleigh.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever shining mind. Waller.

I hope clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky. Dryden.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning fairs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the days. Addison.

2. To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is encircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour wherewith it over-casts itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good. Hooker.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast. Spenser.

3. To rate too high in computation.

The king, in his account of peace and calms, did much over-cast his fortunes, which proved full of broken seas, tides, and tempests. Bacon.

To OVER-CHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.]

1. To oppress; to cloy; to surcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way. Raleigh's History of the World.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment. Cicero.

2. To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants. Pope.

3. To burthen.

He whispers to his pillow
The secrets of his over-charged soul. Shakespeare.

Here's Gloster, a foe to citizens,
Over-charging your free parties with large fines. Shakespeare.

5. To fill too full.

Vol. II.

Her heart is but over-charg'd; she will recover. Shakespeare.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it. South.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose. Locke.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid, in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it. Addison's Spectator.

6. To load with too great a charge.

As cannons over-charg'd with double cracks. Shak.

Who in deep mipes for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns over-charg'd, breaks, mingles, or recoils. Denham.

To OVER-CLOUD. v. a. [over and cloud.]

To cover with clouds.

The silver empress of the night,
Over-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light. Tuckel.

To OVER-CLOY. v. a. [over and cloy.]

To fill beyond satiety.

A scum of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their over-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction. Shakespeare.

To OVER-COME. v. a. pret. overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and this one moiety Transform'd to fish, for their bold surquedry. Spenser.

This wretched woman overcame
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been. Spenser.
Of whom a man is overcome, of the same, is he brought in bondage. 1 Peter, ii. 19.

Fire by thicker air overcomes,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more. Prior.

2. To surmount.

Miranda is a constant relief to poor people in their misfortunes and accidents; there are sometimes little misfortunes that happen to them, which of themselves they could never be able to overcome. Lowe.

3. To overflow; to surcharge.

Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly overcomes the granaries with stores. Philips.

4. To come over or upon; to invade suddenly. Not in use.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? Shakespeare.

To OVER-COME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged. Romans, iii. 4.

OVER-COME. n. f. [from the verb.]

He who overcomes.

To OVER-COUNT. v. a. [over and count.]

To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much
We do over-count thee. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To OVER-COVER. v. a. [over and cover.]

To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel house,
Over-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky thanks and yellow chaplains skulls. Shakespeare.

To OVER-CROW. v. a. [over and crow.]

To crow as in triumph.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beginneth now to over-crow the high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all out-laws. Spenser.

To OVERDO. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing is over-done is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirror up to nature. Shakespeare.

Nature, so intent upon finishing her work, much oftener overdoes than under-does. You shall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none. G. v.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault up on your lady who hurried you. Swift.

To OVER-DRESS. v. a. [over and dress.]

To adorn lavishly.

In all, let Nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare. Pope.

To OVER-DRIVE. v. a. [over and drive.]

To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young, if men should over-drive one day, all will die. Cicero, xxxiii. 13.

To OVER-EYE. v. a. [over and eye.]

1. To superintend.

2. To observe; to remark.
I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over-eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakespeare.

To OVER-EMPTY. v. a. [over and empty.]

To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses. Cicero.

OVERFALL. n. [over and fall.] Cataract.

Postatus addeth, that those which dwell near those falls of water, are deaf from their infancy, like those that dwell near the overfalls of Nilus. Raleigh's History of the World.

To OVER-FLOAT. v. n. [over and float.]

To swim; to float.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and over-floats,
With a red deluge, their increasing moats. Dryden.

To OVER-FLOW. v. n. [over and flow.]

1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe,
Ere yet with blood our ditches over-flow. Dryden.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the over-flowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self. Locke.

2. To exuberate; to abound.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but such an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make. Rogers.

To OVER-FLOW. v. a. pret. over-flowed; part. pass. over-flowed or over-flown.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, would'st thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to over-flow all thy hopes? Taylor.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer over-flows the pails. Dryden.

2. To deluge; to drown; to over-run; to over-power.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations over-flowed all Christendom, came down to the sea-coast. Spenser.

Clanias over-flow'd th' unhappy coast. Dryden.
Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries so over-flown, still situate between the tropics? Bemly.

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroy'd in a deluge of water, that overflooded the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west. Linnæus.

Thus

Thus oft by mariners are shown,
Earl Godwin's castles over-flow. Swift.
OVER-FLOW. n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?
—In great measure.

—A kind over-flow of kindness. Shakespeare.
Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful, for that it keepeth the ground warm. Bacon's Natural History.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: so that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed for disjointed pious discourses, full of warmth and seal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through. Lacke.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a menfuration. Arbutnot on Coins.
The expression may be ascribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses.

OVER-FLOWING. n. f. [from over-flow.]
Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the over- flowings of their fancy that way. Denham.

When the over-flowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministers of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it. Rogers.

OVER-FLOWINGLY. adv. [from over- flowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundant. A word not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his indigence forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he so overflowingly abounds with.

To OVER-FLY. v. a. [over and fly.] To cross by flight.

A failing kite

Can scarce o'er fly them in a day and night. Dryd.
OVER-FORWARDNESS. n. f. [over and forwardness.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

By an over-forwardness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits. Hale.

To OVER-FREIGHT. v. a. pret. over- freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-fraught with people, in towing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk. Garrow.

Grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

Sorrow has so o'er-fraught

This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime. Denham.

To OVER-GET. v. a. [over and get.] To pass; to leave behind.

With six hours hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, to rightly hit the way,
I over-got them a little before night. Sidney.

To OVER-GLANCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a cursory eye,
Over-glanc'd the articles. Shakespeare's Henry V.

To OVER-GO. v. a. [over and go.]
1. To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far over-going his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty. Sidney.

Great Nature hath laid down at last
The mighty birth wherewith so long she went,
To over-went the time of ages past,
To lie in upon our lost content. Daniel.

To cover. Obsolete.

All which, my thoughts say, they shall never do,
But rather that the earth shall covergo
Some one at least. Chapman.

To OVER-GO'GE. v. a. [over and gorge.]
To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd? Shakesp.
OVER-GREAT. adj. [over and great.]
Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided: yet this must not run it, by an over-great shyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things. Lacke.

To OVER-GROW. v. a. [over and grow.]
To cover with growth.

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof. Spenser.

The woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echoes mourn. Milton.

To rise above.

If the binds be very strong and much over-grow the poles, some advise to strike off their heads with a long switch. Mortimer.

To OVER-GROW. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut away thorough the thick and over-grown woods, and so came to Solyma. Knutson.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow.
L'Estrange.

Him for a happy man I own,
Whose fortune is not over-grown. Swift.

OVER-GROWTH. n. f. [over and growth.]
Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Oft breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

The fortune in being the first in an invention, doth cause sometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches. Bacon.

Supposed to a sequent king, who seeks
To stop their over-growth, as in-mate guests Too numerous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To OVER-HALE. v. a. [over and hale.]
1. To spread over,

The over-haled Phœbus gan avail
His weary walls, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven gan over-hale. Spenser.

2. To examine over again: as, he over- haled my account.

To OVER-HANG. v. a. [over and hang.]
To jut over; to impend over.

Land the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutting his confounded base, Shakesp.

Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bow'rs,
Where flows the murm'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazle over-hangs the streams. Gay.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly.

To OVER-HANG. v. n. To jut over.

The rock was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb. Milton.

To OVER-HARDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle, like over-hardened steel. Boyle.

OVER-HEAD. adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above; in the ceiling.

Over-head the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth Wheels her pale course. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The four stars over-head, represent the four children. Addison.

To OVER-HEAR. v. a. [over and hear.]
To hear those who do not mean to be heard.

I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference. Shakesp.

They had a full sight of the infants at a mask dancing, having over-heard two gentlemen who were tending towards that sight, after whom they peeped. Wotton.

That such an enemy we have who strikes
Our ruin, both by thee inform'd I learn;
And from the passing angel over-heard. Milton.

They were so loud in their discourse, that a blackberry from the next hedge over-heard them.

The nurse,
Though not she words, the marmors over-heard. Dryden.

The winds over-hearing the word pilbery repeated, stunk away privately. Addison.

To OVER-HEAT. v. a. [over and heat.]
To heat too much.

Pleas'd with the form and coolness of the place,
And over-heated by the morning chace. Addison.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be over-heated with pain or fever. Wifman.

To OVER-HEED. v. a. [over and heed.]

As his fair leman flying through a brook,
He over-heed nought moved with her piteous look. Spenser.

To OVER-JOY. v. a. [over and joy.] To transport; to ravish.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither over-joyed in any great good things of this life, nor sorrowful for a little thing. Taylor's Guid.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly over- joyed with these speeches, was struck into a sad silence for a time. Hayward.

This love-sick virgin, over-joy'd to find
The boy alone, still follow'd him behind. Addison.

OVER-JOY. n. f. Transport; ecstasy.

The mutual conf'rence that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms, such as any wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister. Shakespeare.

To OVERLA-BOUR. v. a. [over and la- bour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

She without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd, home. Dryden.

To OVERLADE. v. a. [over and lade.]
To overburthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a soul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear

Our passions and our hopes on high.
That thence they may defirey

The noblest way how to despair and die? Suckling.

OVERLARGE. adj. [over and large.]
Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthrifely.

OVERLAPPINGLY. adv. [over and lap.]
With exaggeration. A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too overlappingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed. Bruxwood.

To OVERLAY. v. a. [over and lay.]
1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-lays the commons too much.

Tupper.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and oppress, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries.

Hooker.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to disburthen itself and lay the load upon others.

Releigh.

We praise the things we hear with much noise willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other.

Ben Jonson.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners.

King Charles.

Our sins have overlaid our hopes. King Charles.
The strong Entreaties came in Arcite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid.

Dryden.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a stay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay.

Milton.

The new-born babes by nurses over-laid.

Dryd.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.

Saunders's Sermons.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for l'olomy:

A heavy lump of earth without doisee,

A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire.

Dryden.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mists,

And upward shoot.

Dryden.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself. The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered.

Addison's Spectator.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books.

4. To cloud; to over-cast.

Phœbus' golden face it did stain,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay.

Spenser.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver,
and all the pillars were filled with silver.

Exodus.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold.

Milton.

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou art impower'd
To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

Milt.

To OVERLEAP. v. a. [over and leap.]

To pass by a jump.

A step

On which I must fall down or else o'erleap,
For in my way it lies.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In vain did Nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring ships and men prophane
Th' eternal fences over-leap,

And pass at will the boundless deep.

Dryden.

OVERLEATHER. n. s. [over and leather.]

The part of the shoe that covers the foot.

I have sometimes more feet than shoes; or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.

Shakespeare.

OVERLIGHT. w. s. [over and light.]

Too strong light.

An over-light maketh the eyes dark, inasmuch as perpetual looking against the sun would cause blindness.

Bacon.

To OVERLIVE. v. a. [over and live.]

live longer than another; to survive; to out-live.

Mulidorus, who shewed a mind not to over-live, Pyrcies, prevailed.

Sidney.

He concludes in hearty prayers,
That your attempts may over-live the hazard
And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Shakespeare.

They over-lived that envy, and had their pendons afterwards.

Hayward.

To OVERLIVE. v. n. To live too long.

Why do I over-live?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain?

Milton's Paradise Lost.

OVERLIVER. n. s. [from over live.]

Survivor; that which lives longest.

A peace was concluded, to continue for both the kings lives, and the over-liver of them.

The memory of youth is charged, and over- loaded, and all they learn is meer ja gon.

Fulton.

Men over-loaded with a large estate
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit;
The rich may be polite, but oh! 'tis sad,
To say you're curious, when we swear you're mad.

OVERLONG. adj. [over and long.]

Too long.

I have transgressed the laws of oratory, in making my periods and parentheses over-long.

Boyle.

To OVERLOOK. v. a. [over and look.]

1. To view from a higher place.

The pile o'er-look'd the town, and drew the sight,
Surpris'd at once with reverence and delight.

Dryd.

I will do it with the same respect to him, as if he were alive, and over-looking my paper while I write.

Dryden.

2. To examine by the eye; to peruse.

Would I had o'er-look'd the letter.

Shakespeare.

3. To superintend; to over-see.

He was present in person to over-look the magistrates, and to oversee those subjects with the terror of his sword.

Spenser.

In the greater out-patishes many of the poor pa-risoners through neglect do perish, for want of some heedful eye to over-look them.

Graunt.

4. To review.

The time and care that are required,
To over-look and file, and polish well,
Eight poets from that necessary toll.

Roscommon.

5. To pass by indulgently.

This part of good-nature which consists in the pardoning and over-looking of faults, is to be exercis'd only in doing ourselves justice in the ordinary commerce of life.

Addison.

In vain do we hope that God will over-look such high contradiction of sinners, and pardon offences committed against the plain convictions of conscience.

6. To neglect; to slight.

Of the two relations, Christ over-look'd the meaner, and denominated them solely from the more honourable.

Saith.

To over-look the entertainment before him, and languish for that which lies out of the way, is sickly and servile.

Collier.

The suffrage of our poet laureat should not be over-look'd.

Addison.

Religious fear, when produced by just apprehensions of a divine power, naturally over-looks all human greatness, that stands in competition with it, and extinguishes every other terror.

Addison.

The happiness of mankind, over-looking those solid blessings which they already have, set their hearts upon somewhat they want.

Atterbury.

They over-look truth in the judgements they pass on adversity and prosperity. 'The temptations that attend the former they can easily see, and dread at a distance; but they have no apprehensions of the dangerous consequences of the latter.

Atterbury.

OVERLOOKER. n. s. [over and look.]

The original word signifies an overlooker, or one who stands higher than his fellows and overlooks them.

Watts.

OVERLOOK. n. s. The same with overlook.

In extremity we carry our ordinance better than we were wont, because our neither over-laps are raised commonly from the water; to wit, between the lower part of the port and the sea.

Raleigh.

OVERMASTED. adj. [over and mast.]

Having too much mast.

Cloanthus, better man'd, pursu'd him fast,
But his o'er-masted gaily check'd his haste.

Dryden.

To OVERMASTER. v. a. [over and master.]

To subdue; to govern.

For your desire to know what is between us,
O'er-master it as you may.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

So sleeps a pilot, whilst poor bark is prest
With many an unmerciful o'er-mast'ring wave.

Crashaw.

They are o'er-mast'ring with a storm of diuakards, the only soldiery left about them, or else comply with all rapines and violences.

Milton in Education.

To OVRMATCH. v. a. [over and match.]

To be too powerful; to conquer; to oppress by superior force.

I have seen a swan
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

Shakespeare.

Sir William Lucy, with me
Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.

Shak.

Alas, let I, who erst
Thought none my equal, now be over-match'd.

Paradise Regain'd.

How great is your curiosity be, our excess is greater, and does not only over-match, but supplant
it.

Decay of Poetry.

He from that length of time dire omens drew,
Of English o'er-match'd, and Dutch too strong,
Who never fought three days but to pursue.

Dryd.

It moves our wonder, that a foreign guest
Should over-match the most, and match the best.

Dryden.

OVERMATCH. n. s. [over and match.]

One of superior powers; one not to be overcome.

Spain is no over-match for England, by that which leadeth all men, that is, experience and reason.

Bacon.

Ever was his over-match, who, self-deceiv'd
And rash, before hand had no better weigh'd
The strength he was to cope with on his own.

Milt.

In a little time there will scarce be a woman of quality in Great-Britain, who would not be an over- match for an Irish priest.

Addison.

OVERMEASURE. n. s. [over and mea-] sure.] Something given over the due measure.

To OVERMIX. v. a. [over and mix.]

To mix with too much.

Those things these parts o'er-rule, no joys shall know,

Or little measure over-mix with woe.

Crowe.

OVERMOST. adj. [over and most.]

Highest; over the rest in authority.

OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.]

Too much; more than enough.

It was the custom of those former ages, in their over-much gratitude, to advance the first authors of an useful discovery among the number of their gods.

Wilkins.

An over-much use of salt, besides that it occasions thirst and o'er-much drinking, has other ill effects.

Locke.

OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.

The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in their things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in their things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds.

Hooker.

Perhaps
I also erred, in over-much admiring
What seem'd in thee so perfect, that I thought
No evil durst attempt thee.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

OVE

Defect not then to over-much thyself,
Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides. Milton.

OVERMUCH. n. s. [from over-much.] More than enough.

By attributing over-much to things
Less excellent, as thou thyself perceiv'st. Milton.
With respect to the blessings the world enjoys, even good men may ascribe over-much to themselves. Gray.

OVERMUCHNESS. n. s. [from over-much.]

Exuberance; superabundance. A word not used nor elegant.

There are words that do as much raise a style, as others can depress it; superabundance and over-much- ness amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean. Bin Jonson.

OVERNIGHT. n. s. [from over and night.] This seems to be used by Shakespeare as a noun, but by Addison more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a preposition. Night before bed-time.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken. Shakespeare.

Will confesses, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night.
Addison.

TO OVERNAME. v. a. [from over and name.]

To name in a series.

Over-name them; and as thou namest them I will describe them. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

TO OVEROFFICE. v. a. [from over and office.]

To insult by virtue of an office.

This might be the fate of a politician which this over-offices. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [from over and officious.]

Too busy; too importunate.

This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; so that if he looks about him, he must take not care of it. Collier.

TO OVERPASS. v. a. [from over and pass.]

1. To cross

I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs over-pass,
When on a sudden Torrismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly over. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When these they over-pass, and those they floun? Dryden.

2. To over-look; to pass with disregard

The complaint about psalms and hymns might as well be over-pass without any answer, as it is without any cause brought forth. Hooker.

I read the satire thou entitlest first,
And laid aside the rest, and over-pass,
And swore, I thought the writer was accurst,
That his first satire had not been his last. Harrington.

Remember that Pelican conjueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the east
He slightly view'd, and lightly over-pass'd. Milton.

3. To omit in a reckoning

Arithmetical progression demonstrates how far mankind would increase, over-passing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites who were multiplied in two hundred or fifteen years, from seventy to sixty thousand armen. Raleigh.

4. To omit; not to receive; not to comprise.

If the grace of him which saveth over-pass
some, so that the part of the church for them be not received, this may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousness. Hooker.

OVERPASS. part. adj. [from over pass.]

Gone; pass.

What canst thou swear by now?—
By time to come—
That thou hast wronged in the time over-pass.
Shakespeare.

OVERPAY. v. a. [from over and pay.] To beyond the price.

OVE

Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again.
When I have found it. Shakespeare.

You have yourself your kindness over-paid,
He ceases to oblige you can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heavenly smile over-pay his pains? Prior.

TO OVERPERCH. v. a. [from over and perch.]

To fly over.

With love's light wings did I over-perch these walls.

For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakespeare.

TO OVERPEER. v. a. [from over and peer.]

To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of use.

The ocean over-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
Over-beats your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Your argosies with portly fall
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curtsy to them, do them reverence. Shakespeare.

Mountainous error would be too highly heapt,
For truth to over-peer. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whose top branch over-pass'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind. Shakespeare.

They are invincible by reason of the over-peering mountains that back the one, and slender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandy's Journey.

OVERPLUS. n. s. [from over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than sufficient.

Some other sinners there are, from which that overplus of strength in persuasion doth arise.

A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus remained still in the mortar. L'Estrange.

It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addison.

TO OVERPLY. v. a. [from over and ply.] To employ too laboriously.

What supports me, dost thou ask?
The conscience, friend, I have lost them over-plied,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poems.

TO OVERPOSE. v. a. [from over and pose.]

To outweigh.

Whether over-poses who have lost their thighs will float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others over-posed by the hinder legs;
we have not made experiment. Brown.

The scale
Over-posed by darkness, less the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the summer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is lost in night. Croch.

OVERPOSE. n. s. [from the verb.] Pre-ponderant weight.

Horace, in his first and second book of odes, was still rising, but came not to his meridian till the third. After which his judgment was an over- pose to his imagination. He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he descended in his fourth by slow degrees. Dryden.

Some over-poses of Iway by turns they share,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.

TO OVERPOWER. v. a. [from over and power.]

To be predominant over; to oppress by superiority.

Now in danger it's, now known in arms
Not to be over-powered. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As much light over-powers the eye, so they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with snow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.

Reason allows none to be confident, but him only who governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and can neither be surprised nor over-powered. South.

After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself outwitted by Cassar; he broke with him, over- powered him in the senate, and caused many unjust decrees to pass against him. Dryden.

OVE

The historians make these mountains the hand-ards of the rise of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been standing when it did so rise and over-power the earth. Woodward.

Inspiration is, when such an over-powering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind, by God himself, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it.
Winn's Logick.

TO OVERPRESS. v. a. [from over and press.]

To bear upon with irrepressible force; to overwhelm; to crush.

Having an excellent horse under him, when he was over-pressed by some, he avoided them. Sidney.

Michael's argo main promontories flung,
And over-press'd whole legions weak with sin. Rafsonman.

When a prince enters on a war, he ought ma-turely to consider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over- pressed with many burthensome taxes. Swift.

TO OVERPRISE. v. a. [from over and prize.]

To value at too high price.

Parents over-prize their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.

OVERRANK. adj. [from over and rank.] Too rank.

It produces over-rank birds. Mortimer.

TO OVERRATE. v. a. [from over and rate.]

To rate at too much.

While vain shows and scenes you over-rate,
Tis to be feared;—
That as a fire the former house over-throw,
Machines and tempests will destroy the new. Dryden.

To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our station, and in estimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather low than high; for our desires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary; and our temptations to our desires. Rogers.

TO OVERREACH. v. a. [from over and reach.]

1. To rise above.

The mountains of Olympus, Athos, and Atlas,
over-reach and surmount all winds and clouds. Kaligi.

Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed in a deluge of water in such excess, that the floods over-reach'd the tops of the highest mountains. Barnet.

To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A sagacious man is said to have a long reach.

What more cruel than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he should be subject? Hooker.

I have laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross over-reach- ing. Shakespeare.

Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.

A man who had been matchless held
In cunning, over-reach'd where least he thought;
To save his credit, and for very sight,
Still will be tempting him who soils him still. Milr.

There is no pleasanter encounter than a trial of skill betwixt sharpers to over-reach one another.

Forbidding oppression, defrauding and over-reach- ing one another, perfidiously and treachery.

We may no more sue for them than we can tell a lie, or swear an unlawful oath, or over-reach in their cause, or be guilty of any other transgression. Kettlewell.

Such a principle is ambition, or a desire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reach'd, and engaged contrary to their natural inclination in a glorious and laudable course of action. South.

John had got an impression that Lewis was to deadly causing a man, that he was afraid to venture

run himself alone with him; at last he took heart Of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but sticking to my point, and he can never over-reach History of John Bull.

To OVERREACH. v. a. A horse is said to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and strikes his toes against his fore-shoes. Farrier's Dict.

OVERREACHER. n. s. [from over-reach.]
A cheat; a deceiver.

To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.]
To peruse.

The contents of this is the return of the dulce;
you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure. Shakspeare.

To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To smear with red.

Prick thy face and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

To OVERRIPE. v. a. [over and ripen.]
To make too-ripe.

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' pensive load?
Shakspeare.

To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roast.]
To roast too much.

'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fast,
Since of ourselves, ourselves ate cholerick,
Than feed it with such over-roasted flesh. Shakspeare.

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]

1. To influence with predominant power; to be superior in authority.

Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I strave against it. Sidney.

That which the church by her ecclesiastical authority shall probably think and desire to be true or good, must in congruity of reason over-rule all other inferior arguments whatsoever. Hooker.

Except our own private, and but probable resolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all possibility of sociable life in the world. Hooker.

What if they be such as will be over-ruled with some one, whom they dare not displease? Whigfite.

His passion and animosity over-ruled his conscience. Clarendon.

A wife man shall over-rule his stars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the constellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.
He is acted by a passion which absolutely overrules him; and so can no more recover himself, than a bowl rolling down an hill stop itself in the middle of its career. South.

'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unless where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulse of conscience and duty.
L'Estrange.

A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to lust; and yet by the force of reason overcome that bad influence. Swift.

2. To govern with high authority; to superintend.

Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over-rule, as in other matters he is accustomed? Hayward.

3. To supersede: as in law to over-rule a plea, is to reject it as incompetent.

Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cornish acre, and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or lesser quantity, according to the fruitfulness or barrenness of the soil. Cicero.

To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]

1. To harass by incursions; to ravage; to rove over in a hostile manner.

Those barbarous nations that over-run the world, possessed those dominions, whereof they are now so called. Spenser.

Till the tears she shed,
Like envious floods over-ran her lovely face,
she was the fairest creature in the world. Shakspeare.

They say, who count it glorious to subdue
By conquest far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by assault. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The nine
Their fainting force to shameful flight compell'd,
And with resistless force over-run the field. Dryden.
Gustavus Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run most of the rest.
Adair.

A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad consequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To out-run; to pass behind.

Pyrocles being come to sixteen, over-run his age in growth, strength, and all things following it, that not Musidorus could perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

We may out run,
By violent swiftness, that which we run at,
And lose by over-running. Shakspeare.

Ahimsa ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cush. 2 Samuel, xviii. 23.

Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faster than the water can follow, the water gathereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he supposeth, holding the motion of the earth to be the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean;
because the earth over-runneth the water. Bacon.

3. To overspread; to cover all over.

With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nabum, i. 8.

This disposition of the parts of the earth, shews us the four steps of some kind of ruin which happened in such a way, that at the same time a general flood of waters would necessarily over-run the whole earth. Burnet.

His tears defar'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears.
Addison.

4. To mischief by great numbers; to pester.

To flatter foolish men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the same with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy state, when they are over-run with passion, and drowned in their lusts. L'Estrange.

Were it not for the incessant labours of this industrious animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addison.

Such provision made, that a country should not want springs as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe.
Woodward's Natural History.

5. To injure by treading down.

6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the insertions.

To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul over-runs with fondness towards
you. Smilh.

Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

To OVERSEE. v. a. [over and see.]

1. To superintend; to overlook.

He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Spenser.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.

I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity.

Will go to council to advise
Which way I encounter, or surprize. Hudibras.
Oversaw. v. a. [from oversee.] Mit-taken; deceived.

A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till such time as we go from signs unto causes, and then some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whereby it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker.

Such overseers, as the overseers of this building, would be so overseen as to make that which is narrower, contain what is larger. Holyday.

They rather observed what he had done and fulfilled for the king and for his country, without further enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarendon.

OVERSEER. n. s. [from oversee.]

1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.
There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure would fall sharp on us. Hooker.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers unto Conaniah.
Chronicles.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Would he his household ornaments prepare;
Hajafs his servants, and as a risen stand,
To keep them working with a thrat'ning wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The church-wardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-parishes many of the poorest parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Grant.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]

1. To turn bottom upwards; to throw off the basis; to subvert.

The tempests met,
The sailors master'd, and the ship o'er set. Dryden.

It is forced through the hiatus of the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; oversetting ships in the harbours, and sinking them. Woodward.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France.
Addison.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Caxline ruined the canal, when it saved the city; for it so twell'd his soul, that ever afterwards, it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis; to turn upside down.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-letting. Motus.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.]

To cover with any thing that causes darkness.

Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life,
And he not seen, nor hears us. Shakspeare.

No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threatening floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.
Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that far'ric walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted, Prior.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]

1. To throw a shadow over any thing.
Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deplete it of nourishment. Bacon.

Death,
Let the damp of thy dull breath

Over-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Crawshaw.

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.
3. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superior influence.

My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I send along: ride forth, and bid the deep Within appointed bound. Milton's Paradise Lost.

On her come
The Holy Ghost, of the Highest
O'er-shadow her. Milton.

7. OVERSHOOT. v. a. [over and shoot.]

To fly beyu
Often it drops, disproportion
Of distance or appl. Reason.

7. OVERSHOOT. v. a.

1. To shoot beyond the mark.
Every inordinate appetite defeat faction, by overshooting the mark it aims. Filmer.

2. To pass swiftly over.

High-raised on fortune's hill, now apples he spies,
O'ershoots the valley which beneath him lies, Forgets the depths between, and travels with his eyes. Marte.

3. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to assert too much.

Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not overshot themselves; which is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere. Hobbes.

In finding fault with the laws, I doubt me, you shall much overshoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other doctrines of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Whigston.

OVERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and fight.]

1. Superintendence.

They gave the money, being told, unto them that had the oversight of the house. 2 Kings, xii.
Feed the flock of God, taking the over-sight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Peter.

2. Mistake; error.

Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his over-sights and sincerely condemneth them?
Hobbes's Pref.

They watch their opportunity to take advantage of their adversaries over-sight. Kettlewell.
Not to his son, he mark'd this oversight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right. Pope.

7. OVERSIZ. v. a. [over and size.]

1. To surpass in bulk.

Those bred in a mountainous country, over-size those that dwell on low levels. Sand's Journey.

Old grandfire Plam seeks. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

7. OVERSKIP. v. a. [over and skip.]

1. To pass by leaping.

Presume not, ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to over-skip the fold, which they about you have pitched. Hobbes.

2. To pass over.

Mark if to get through the over-skip the vest,
Mark if the read over-skip the name. Donne.

3. To escape.

When that over-skip me in the day,
Wherein I high not, false, for thy sake,
The next ensuing hour some foul mischance Turns me. Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

When alone suffers, suffers most in the mind,
When the mind much suffrance does over-skip,
When both mates and bearing fellowship. Shakespeare.

To sleep too long.

7. OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.]

To pass undone, unnoticed, or unguessed;
to neglect.

The carelessness of the justices in imposing this tax, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carver.

No that hath over-slipped such opportunities; is to beware and retrieve them betimes. Hammond.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must cele-

7. OVERSNOW. v. a. [over and snow.]

To cover with snow.

These I wielded while my bloom was warm,
Ere age unfurrow my nerves, or time over-snow'd
my head. Dryden's Amis.

OVERSOLD. part. [from over and sell.]

Sold at too high a price.

Life with ease I can disclaim,
And think it over-sold to purchase fame. Dryden.

OVERSOON. adv. [over and soon.]

Too soon.

The lad may prove well enough, if he over-soon think not too well of himself, and will bear away that he heareth of his elders. Sidney.

OVERSPENT. part. [over and spend.]

Wearied; harassed; forspent. The verb overspend is not used.

Thestylis wild thyme and garlick beats,
For harvest-hinds, overspent with toil and heats. Dryden.

7. OVERSPREAD. v. a. [over and spread.]

To cover over; to fill; to scatter over.

Whether they were Spaniards, Gauls, Africans, Goths, or some other which did overspread all Christendom, it is impossible to affirm. Spenser.

Of the three sons of Noah was the whole earth
overspread. Genesis, ix, 19.

Darkness Europe's face did overspread,
From lazy cells, where superstition bred. Deepest.

Not a deluge that only over-run some particular region; but that overspread the face of the whole earth from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

7. OVERSTAND. v. a. [over and stand.]

To stand upon conditions.

Her's they shall be, if you refuse the price;
What madman would overstand his market twice? Dryden.

7. OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.]

To stare wildly.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a flo-venly bulkin, or an overstaring frowned head. Afcham.

7. OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.]

To fill too full; to crowd.

Had the world been eternal, it must long ere this have been overstocked, and become too narrow for the inhabitants. Withins.

If raidery had entered the old Roman coasts, we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. And son.

Some bishop, not overstocked with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some inconsiderable benefice. Kruijs.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks, it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barnstable should be ever over- stocked. Swift.

7. OVERSTORE. v. a. [over and store.]

To store with too much.

Fishes are more numerous than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and of all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long since overstored with fish. Hale.

7. OVERSTRAIN. v. n. [over and strain.]

To make too violent efforts.

Crassus lost himself, his equipage, and his army,
by overstraining for the Parthian gold. Camden.

He wished all painters would imprint this lesson deeply in their memory, that with overstraining and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden's Duf.

7. OVERSTRETCH. v. a. [over and stretch.]

To stretch too far.

Confessions were apt to overstretch their privileges, in which St. Cyprian made a notable stand against them. Attyff.

7. OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and sway.]

To over-rule; to bear down.

When they are the major part of a general assembly, then their voices being more in number, most over-sway their judgments who are fewer. Hobbes.

Great command over-sways our order. Shakespeare.

Some great and powerful nations over-sway the rest. Boyd.

7. OVERSWELL. v. a. [over and swell.]

To rise above.

Fill, Lucius, fill the wine over-swell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. Shakespeare.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth over-swell, he breaks with hideous fall. Fairf.

7. OVERT. adj. [over, French.] Open;

publick; apparent.

To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shakespeare.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise;
but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune; certain deliveries of a man's self. Bacon.

My repulse at Hull was the first overt essay to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. King Charles.

The design of their destruction may have been projected in the dark; but when all was ripe, their enemies proceeded to so many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meaneest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no further than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Rogers.

7. OVERTLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

Openly.

7. OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]

1. To catch any thing by pursuit; to come up to something going before.

We durst not continue longer to near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did cease to be partakers with her sins. Hobbes.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken; and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shakespeare.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake,
I will divide the spoil. Exodus, xv, 9.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-skip hays, as bullets flown before
A later bullet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

To overtake move a speedy pace,
Or overtake will soon overtake thee in the chase. Dryd.

How much he should for fear vengeance should overtake him, before he has made his peace with God! Experi.

2. To take by surprise.

If a man be taken by surprise, ye which are spiritual reformers, as are the spirit of meekness. Galatians, vi, 1.

It is full out, that through infirmity we be overtaken by any temptation, we must labour to rise again, and turn from one sin to God, and speedy repentance. Forbes.

7. OVERTEAR. v. a. [over and tear.]

him in his own estate. Sidney.

Here's Glo'ster
O'er charging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare.
Thou walkest in peril of thy overthrowing.
Eccles. xiii. 13.

God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness. Proverbs.

O loss of one in heav'n, to judge of wile
Since Satan fell, whom folly overthrew. Milton.

OVERTHROW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The state of being turned upside down.

2. Ruin; destruction.

Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is desired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refined sect of Christian believers.
Hooker.

They return again into Florida, to the murder and overthrow of their own countrymen. Abbot.
I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow.
Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.

From without came to mine eyes the blow,
When to mine inward thoughts did faintly yield;
Both these conspir'd poor reason's overthrow;
False in myself, thus have I lost the field. Sidney.
Quiet soul, depart;

For I have seen our enemies overthrow. Shakespeare.
From these divers Scots reared more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Hayward.

Poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is giv'n, and strait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go,
To reap the fruit of the dire overthrow. Dryden.

4. Degradation.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself
And found the blessedness of being little. Shakespeare.

OVERTHROWER. n. s. [from overthrow.]

He who overthrows.

OVERTHWART. adj. [over and thwart.]

T' overtop old Pelion or the flevis head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
In the dance the graceful goddess leads
The quite of nymphs, and overtops their heads.
Dryden.

2. To excel; to surpass.

Who ever yet
Have stood to charity, and display'd th' effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdom O'ertopping woman's power. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
As far as the soul overtops the body, so far its pains, or rather mournful sensations, exceed those of the carcass. Harvey.

3. To obscure; to make of less importance by superior excellence.

Whereas he had been heretofore an arbiter of Europe, he should now grow less, and be over- topped by to great a conjunction. Bacon.

One whom you love,
Had champion kill'd, or trophy won,
Rather than thus be overtopp'd,
Would'st you not wish his laurels cropt? Swift.

To OVERTRIPE. v. a. [over and trip.]

To trip over; to walk lightly over.

In such a night,
Did Thisbe fearfully overtrip the dew,
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
And ran dismay'd away. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

OVERTURE. n. s. [overture, French.]

1. Opening; disclosure; discovery.

I wish
You had only in your silent judgment try'd it, Without more overtures. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

2. Proposal; something offered to consideration.

Mac Morugh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the sovereign lordship thereof. Davies on Ireland.
All these fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealing, could not take place.
Hayward.

We with open breast
Stand ready to receive them, if they like
Our overture, and turn not back peevish. Milton.
Withstand the overtures of ill, and be intent and serious in good. Fall.

The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards a commodation with great importunity. Clarendon.

If a convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overtures. Rogers.

Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigested and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise.
Swift.

To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]

1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.

He is wise in heart and mighty in strength-- which removeth the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job.

These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burmet.

This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God, which is an answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless, and as unintelligible as any of those he has laid as. Locke.

But he comes round about again, and overturns
every stone that he had laid. Lesley.

If we will not encourage publick works of beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall over- turn what we help to build, there is no room left for charity. Astlebury.

A monument of deathless fame,
A woman's hand overturns. Roscoe.

2. To over-power; to conquer.

Pain excessive overturns all patience. Milton.

OVERTURNER. n. s. [from overturn.]

I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.

To OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.]

To rate at too high a price.

We have just cause to stand in some fear, lest by thus overvaluing their sermons they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hooker.

To overvalue human power is likewise an estimation of human weakness. Hooker.

To OVERVEIL. v. a. [over and veil.]

To cover.

The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whole pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth. Shakespeare.

To OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.]

To conquer by plurality of votes.

The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. K. Charles.

To OVERWATCH. v. a. [over and watch.]

To subdue with long want of rest.

Morpheus is dispatch'd;
Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
Dissolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed.
Dryden.

OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.

While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.

OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.

Perennial persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh.

To OVERWEARY. v. a. [over and weary.]

To subdue with fatigue.

Might not Palinurus fall asleep and drop into the sea, having been over-weary'd with watching? Dryden.

To OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter by violence of weather.

How like a younker or a prodigal,
The shav'd back puts from her native boy,
Hugg'd and embraced by the trumpet wind?
How like the prodigal doth the return,
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the trumpet wind!
Shakespeare.

To OVERWEN. v. a. [over and wen.]

1. To think too highly; to think with arrogance.

2. To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought; especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hammer.

Oft have I seen a hot reasoning wit,
Run back and bite, because he was with-held.

My master b... for me, to whose feeling follows I mi... ally, as I o... to think to. Shakespeare.

Less he These i... rags of France, their lives. Shakespeare.

Take...
Thy...
Study the be...
But of thyself an...
They...
And at thy growing virtue.
No angel find in thee. Milton.

Satan might have learn'd
Let's overweening, since he said in Job, Whole constant perseverance overcame
Where's his cruel malice could invent. Milton.

No man is so bold, rash, and overweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.

Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.

Men of fair minds and not given up to the overweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it in many cases, one with amazement hears the sayings, and is astonished at the obstinacy, of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.

Now enters overweening pride,
And scandal even gaping wide. Swift.

- OVERWEENINGLY. adv. [from overween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.

To OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.] To preponderate.

Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause; but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivers, they are overweighed. Hobbes.

My unsull'd name, th' austereness of my life,
Will to your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report. Shakespeare.

- OVERWEIGHT. n. s. [over and weight.] Preponderance.

Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

- To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and whelm.] 1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.

What age is this, where honest men,
Plac'd at the helm,
A sea of some foul nature open,
Shall overwhelm. Ben Jonson.

Back do I toss this treason to thy head,
With the hell hated overwhelm thy heart. Shakespeare.

How trifling an apprehension is the shame of being laughed at by fool, when compar'd with that everlasting shame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ. Perr.

Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
Death hastes again; one hour overwhelm them all. Pope.

2. To overlook gloomily.

Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully is doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shakespeare.

An apothecary late I noted,
In talk'd words with overwhelming brows, Rolling of snuff. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

- OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelm.] In such a manner as to overwhelm. Inelegantly, and not in use.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impudently betray their souls to sin for that which they call light and trivial, which is so indeed, in respect of the acquiescence, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the peni-tious consequences. Decay of Piety.

- OVERWISE. adj. [over and wise.] Wise to affectation.

Make not thyself overwise. Eccl. vii. 16.

- OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.] 1. Labour'd too much.

Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing;
so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden.

2. Worked all over.

Of Gothick structure was the northern side,
Overwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.

3. It has in Shakespeare a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for over-raught; that is, overreached or cheated.

By some device or other,
The villain is overwrought of all my money:
They say this town is full of cozenage. Shakespeare.

- OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.] 1. Worn out; subdued by toil.

With watching overworn, with care oppress'd, Unhappy I had laid me down to rest. Dryden.

2. Spoiled by time.

The jealous overworn widow and herself,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare.

- OVERYEARED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.

Among them dwelt
A maid, whose fruit was none, not overyear'd. Fairfax.

- OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.

It is not in such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous for or against the immutability of the soul, have been forward to make the world believe. Locke.

- OUCHT. n. s. [aphrit, that is, a whit, Saxon.] This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.

For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.

He asked him if he saw ought. Mark, viii. 23.
To do ought good never will be our task;
But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton.

Universal Lord! be bounteous still
To give us only good; and if the night
Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.

- OUGHT. verb imperfect; in the second person oughtest. [This word the etymologists make the preterite of owe, but it has often a present signification.]

1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.

Apprehending the occasion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought
you. Spelman.

This blood which men by treason sought,
That followed, sir, which to myself I ought. Dryden.

2. To be obliged by duty.

Know how thou oughtest to behave. Timon.
Speak boldly as I ought to speak. Ephesians.
She acts just as she ought.

But never, never reach'd one generous thought. Pope.

Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret law, and not to make or give law. Burton.

We ought to profess our dependance upon him, and our obligations to him for the good things we enjoy. We ought to publish to the world our sense of his goodness with the voice of praise, and tell of all his wondrous works. We ought to comfort his servants and children in their afflictions, and relieve his poor distressed members in their manifold necessities; for he that giveth alms, sacrificeth praise. Milton.

3. To be fit; to be necessary.

These things ought not so to be. Yam.
If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Locke.

4. Applied to persons it has a sense not easily explained. To be fit, or necessary that he should.

Ought not Christ to have suffered? Locke.

5. Ought is both of the present and past tenses, and of all persons except the second singular.

- OVIIFORM. adj. [ovum and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of an egg.

world was oviform, hath been the sense and language of all antiquity. Burns.

- OVI-PAROUS. adj. [ovum and pario, Lat.] Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.

That fishes and birds should be oviparous, is a plain sign of providence. Mor's Ant. against Atoms.

Birds and oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them for many years laying. Ray.

- OUNCE. n. s. [once, French; uncia, Lat.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight.

In troy-weight, an ounce is twenty penny weights; a penny-weight twenty-four grains.

The blood he hath lost,
Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
By many an ounce, he dropt it for his country. Shakespeare.

A sponge dry weigheth one ounce twenty six grains; the same sponge being wet, weigheth fourteen ounces six drams, and three quarters. Bacon.

- OUNCE. n. s. [once, French; onza, Spanish.] An animal between a panther and a cat.

Lead our first battle, by... and we Shall take upon us what... Shakespeare.

Our will is given almighty,
Our wit is given to love him.
But God could not be known...
But by his works which through the sense are shewn. 50

our little world this soul of ours
 ing only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
 And to are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
Our soul is the very fame being it was yesterday.
 last year, twenty years ago. Beattie

2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.

Edmund, whole virtue in this instance
 So much commands itself, you shall be ours. Shak.
 Thou that hast fashion'd twice this soul of ours,
 So that she is by double title thine. Davies.
 Be ours, who e'er thou art,

Forget the Greeks. Denham
 'Tis allian, shock by Montezuma's powers,
 Has, to resist his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.
 The same thing was done by them in suing in their courts, which is now done by us in suing in ours. Kettnerworth.

Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours: it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections, unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength. Leech.
 Their organs are better disposed than ours, for receiving grateful impressions from sensible objects.
Atobany.

His calls and invitations of us to that repentance, not on outward, in the ministry of the word, but also inward, by the motions of the Spirit.

Duty of Man.

He took a low ring leave, but who can tell
What outward had might inward love conceal?

Dryden.

3. Extrinsic; adventitious.

Princes have their titles for their glories,
An outward honour, for an inward toil. Shakespeare's

Part in peace, and having mourn'd your sin
For outward and Eden lost, had paradise within. Dryden.

4. Foreign, not intestine.

It was intend'd to raise an outward war to join with some sedition within doors. Howard.

5. Tending to the out-parts.

'The fire will force its outward way,
Or, in the prison pent, consume the prey. Dryden.

6. [In theology.] Carnal; corporeal;

not spiritual.

When the soul being inwardly moved to lift itself up by prayer, the outward man is surprized in some outer posture; God will rather look to the inward motions of the mind, than to the outward form of the body. Duffu.

We may also pray against temporal punishments, that is, any outward affliction, but this with submission to God's will, according to the example of Christ. Duty of Man.

OUTWARD. n. s. External form.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

1. To foreign parts: as, a ship outward bound.

2. To the outer parts.

OUTWARDLY. adv. [from outward.]

1. Externally: opposed to inwardly.

That which inwardly a man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. L. L.

Gray'd with the outward remaining in their tears
However outwardly they seem to consent,
Yet the outward which their wounded honour bear.

Dryden.

2. In appearance; not sincerely.

Many wicked men are often inclined with some inward reverence for that goodness which they can not be persuaded to outwardly say, which they outwardly turn to outwardly. Sparr.

OUTWARDS. adv. Towards the out parts.

Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwardly, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be diffused and lost. Newton's Opticks.

To OUTWEAR. v. a. [out and wear.]

1. To pass tediously.

By the stream, it is the night out-wear,
Thus it is already, how shall nature bear
The dews descending and nocturnal air? Pope.

2. To last longer than something else.

To OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]

Witch is a fine, and jealousy a weed,
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed outweighed. Spenser.

To OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]

1. To exceed in gravity.

These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other out-weighted power whereby it is out-weighted and out-weighted. Wilkins.

2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.

If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition. Shakespeare's

All your care is for your prince I see,
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me.

Dryden.

Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery
out-weighs the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires. Locke.

The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages. Atterbury.

To OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]

To pour out. Not in use.

As when old father Nilus begins to swell,
With timely price about the Egyptian vale,
His fative waves do fertile shore out-weigh,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale. Spenser.

To OUTWIT. v. a. [out and wit.]

To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.

The truest hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be out-witted on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knaved. L'Estrange.

Justice forbids demanding, or going beyond our birth in any matter, when we can over-reach and out-wit him in the game. Kittredge.

After the death of Cato, Pompey found himself out-witted by Cicer, and broke with him.

Dryden.

Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wit to out-wit themselves, and for such as wrestle with Providence, to trip up their own heels. South.

OUTWORK. n. s. [out and work.]

The parts of a fortification next the enemy.

Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the wall of the kingdom, and every great ship is an impregnable fort, and our many safe and commodious ports as the redoubts to secure them.

Bacon.

Death hath taken in the out-work,
And now afflicts the fort, I feel, I feel him
Gravely my heart-tinger. D. M.

OUTWORK. n. s. [from out-work.]

Consumed or destroyed by use.

Better at home he had rid, idle,
Inglorious, and idly, with age out-work. Milton.

To OUTWREST. v. a. [out and wrest.]

To extort by violence.

The glowing anguish
Rivked for force and fier'd inwardly,
'Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Spenser.

OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.]

Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boying of Charybdis, the sea's wildnet,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your transcendent tunes. Ben Jonson.

To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.]

To value.

Out outworth a book
And outworth Henry VIII.

To OWE. v. a. [out and owe.]

I owe, or I ought,

1. To be obliged.

I owe you n. outworth youth,
That which I owe outworth of Venice.
Let none seek me outworth of Venice.

The faith they owe. outworth of Venice.

A son owes help and love. outworth of Venice.

is a subject less indebted to

All your parts of pious duty, outworth of Venice.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. outworth of Venice.

Thou

Thou hast deserv'd more love than I can show,
But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.
If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.

By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe
All his deliverance, and to none but me. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.

O deem thy fall not owe'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of.
For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we no use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy. Shakespeare's Temp.

Fate, shew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this too. Shakespeare.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sinners of the world,
Shall ever meile thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owest thyself to. Shakespeare's Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'ring. Craford.

OWING. part. [from owe. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active principle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety some writers were aware, and having no quick sense of the force of English words, have used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; they say likewise, the effect is due to the cause.]

1. Consequential.

This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomp of it. Locke.

2. Due as a debt. Here due is undoubtedly the proper word.

You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt owing from one country to another, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

3. Imputable to, as an agent.

If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them owing to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of struggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. } n. f. [ule, Saxon; bulote
OWLET. } French and Scottish.] A bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind goblin's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing
For a charm. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I'll be all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakespeare.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Saw every brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bow'r.

Dunciad.

Then Lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes, with the fashionable owls, to bed. Young.

O'WLER. n. f. One who carries contraband goods: in the legal sense, one that carries out wool illicitly. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night: but rather, I believe, a corruption of wooller, by a colloquial neglect of the w, such as is often observed in woman, and by which goodwife is changed to goody. Wooler,
ooler, owler.

By running good, these graceless owlers gain.
Swift.

We understand by some owlers, old people in France. Vattel.

OWN. n. f. [agen, Saxon; eygen, Dut.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my own, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle owen or own, my own; the thing
ownd by, or belonging to me.

Inachus in his own alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.

I yet never was forsown,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakespeare.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings, xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

It is a conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will the linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit thee gloves make of her own upon yarn? Gay.

Poison and pain were to her soul unknown,
Convinced that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradistinction; domestic; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.

There he labours, there he toils with his own,
Keen in the revolution of one year. Dante.

'Tis a morning's labour that readily for us outwitted, and bested it in a day's pay. Epistle.

TO OWN. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.

When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Clemens.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.

Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your count upon our own unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.

Nor hath it been thus only amongst the most civilized nations, but the barbarous Indians likewise have owned that tradition. Within.

I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair princess, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; not to deny.

Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it.

Others will own their weakness of understanding.
Locke.

It must be owned, that, generally speaking,

good parents are never more fond of their daughters, than when they see them too fond of themselves. Law.

again; whereof what is to be looked for but a most dangerous relapse?

You are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.

They are contented as well with mean food, as those that with the rarities of the earth do pamper their voracities.

Praise swelled thee to a proportion ready to burst,
It brought thee to feed upon the air, and to starve thy soul, only to pamper thy imagination.

Diffend his chine and pamper him for sport.
His lordship jolls within at ease,
Pampering his pounce with foreign rarities.

PAMPHLET. n. f. [par un flet, Fr. Whence this word is written anciently, and by Caxton, paunflet.] A small book; properly a book sold unbound, and only stitched.

Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd?

Since I have been reading many English pamphlets and to classes of the Sabbath, I can hardly find any treatise wherein the use of the common service by the minister, and the due frequenting thereof by the people, is once named among the duties or of fices of sanctifying the Lord's day.

He could not, without some tax upon him; it and his ministers for the not executing the law, look upon the bold licence of some in printing pamphlets.

As when some writer in a publick cause,
His pen, to save a sinking nation, drags;
While all is calm, his arguments prevail,
Till power discharging all her stormy bags,
Flutters the feeble pamphlet into rags.

TO PAMPHLET. v. n. [from the noun.] To write small books.

I put pen to paper, and something I have done, though in a poor pamphletting way.

PAMPHLETEER. n. f. [from pamphlet.] A scribbler of small books.

The squibs are those who in the common phrase are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers.

With great injustice I have been pelted by pamphleteers.

TO PAN. v. a. An old word denoting to close or join together.

PAN. n. f. [panne, Saxon.]

1. A vessel broad and shallow, in which provisions are dressed or kept.
This were but to leap out of the pan into the fire.

The pliant brass is laid
On anvils, and of heads and limbs are made, Pans, cans.

2. The part of the lock of the gun that holds the powder.

Our attempts to fire the gun-powder in the pan of the pistol, succeeded not.

3. Any thing hollow: as, the brain pan.

PANACEA. n. f. [panacee, French; πανακεια.] An universal medicine.

PANACEA. n. f. An herb.

PANADA. n. f. [from panis, bread.]

PANADO. } Food made by boiling bread in water.

Their diet ought to be very sparing; gruels, panados, and chicken broth.

PANCAKE. n. f. [pan and cake.] Thin pudding baked in the frying pan.

A certain knight swore by his honour they were good pancakes, and swore by his honour the mul-tard was naught.

The flour makes a very good pancake, mixed with a little wheat flour.

PANCRATICAL. adj. [παν and κρατικός.] Excelling in all the gymnastick exercises.

He was the most pancratical man of Greece, and, as Galen reporteth, able to persist erect upon an oily plank, and not to be removed by the force of three men.

PANCREAS. n. f. [πᾶν and κρέας.] The pancreas, or sweet bread, is a gland of the conglomerate sort, situated between the bottom of the stomach and the vertebrae of the loins: it lies across the abdomen, reaching from the liver to the spleen, and is strongly tied to the peritonaeum, from which it receives its common membranes. It weighs commonly four or five ounces. It is about six fingers breadth long, two broad, and one thick. Its substance is a little soft and supple.

PANCREATICK. adj. [from pancreas.] Contained in the pancreas.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the saliva is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, and is evacuated into the intestines, where being mixed with the choler and pancreatic juice, it is further subtilized, and easily finds its way in at the straight orifices of the ileocolic veins.

The bile is so acid that nature has furnished the pancreatic juice to temper its bitterness.

PANCY. } n. f. [corrupted, I suppose, from panacy, panacea.] A flower; a kind of violet.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the
For violet pale, and crop'd the poppy's head;
To please the sight, and calms sweet to find.

The real essence of gold is as impossible for us to know, as for a blind man to tell in what flower the colour of a pansy is, or is not to be found, whilst he has no idea of the colour of a pansy.

From the brute beasts humanity I learn'd,
And in the pansy's life God's providence discern'd.

PANDECT. n. f. [pandecta, Latin.]

1. A treatise that comprehends the whole of any science.

It were to be wished, that the commons would form a pan-dict of their power and privileges, to be confirmed by the entire legislative authority. Swift.

2. The digest of the civil law.

PANDE-MICK. adj. [πάσις; and δῆμος.] Incident to a whole people.

Those instances bring a consumption, under the notion of a pandemic or endemic, or rather vernacular disease, to England. Harvey.

PANDER. n. s. [This word is derived from Pandarus, the pimp in the story of Troilus and Cressida; it was therefore originally written pandar, till its etymology was forgotten.] A pimp; a male bawd; a procurer; an agent for the lust or ill designs of another.

Let him, with his cap in hand,
Like a bawd pander, hold the chamber door
Whilst by a slave

His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakespeare.
Thou art the pander to her dishonour, and equally to me dishonest. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If ever you prove false to one another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goets-between be called panders after my name. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The sons of happy punks, the pander's heir,
Are privileged

To clap the first, and rule the theatre. Dryden.
Thou hast confest'd thyself the conscious pander
Of that pretended passion;

A single witness infamously known,
Against two persons of unquestion'd fame. Dryden.
My obedient honesty was made

The pander to thy lust and black ambition. Roscoe.

PA'NDER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To pimp; to be subservient to lust or passion.

I proclaim no shame,
When the compulsive ardour gives the charge,
Since first itself as actively doth burn,
And reason panders will. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

PANDERLY. adj. [from pander] Pimp-ing; pimplike.

Oh you panderly rascals! there's a conspiracy against me. Shakespeare.

PANDICULATION. n. s. [pandiculans, Latin.] The restlessness, stretching, and uneasiness that usually accompany the cold fits of an intermitting fever.

Windy spirits, for want of a due volatilization, produce in the nerves a pandiculation, or oscillation, or flutter, or cramp in the muscles. Pleyer.

PANE. n. s. [paneau, French.]

1. A square of glass.

The letters appear'd reverse thro' the pane,
But in Stella's bright eyes they were plac'd right again. Swift.

The face of Eleanor owes more to that single pane than to all the glasses she ever consulted.
Pope's Letters.

2. A piece mixed in variegated works with other pieces.

Him all repute
For his device in handsome a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, pane, print, and plait,
Of all the court to be the best conceit. Donne.

PANEGYRICK. n. s. [panegyricus, Fr.
πανηγυρικός.] An eulogy; an encomiastick piece.

The Athenians met at the sepulchres of those slain at Marathon, and there made panegyrics upon them. Sedding's Fleet.

That which is a satire to other men must be a panegyric to your lordship. Dryden.

As he continues the exercises of these eminent virtues, he may be one of the greatest men that our age has bred, and leave materials for a pan-

gyrick, not unworthy the pen of some future Pliny.
Prior.

To chaff our spices, when themes like these increase,

Shall panegyric reign, and confute coals? Young.
PANEGYRIST. n. s. [from panegyric;
panegyristes, French.] One that writes praise; encomiast.

Add these few lines out of a far more ancient panegyrist in the time of Constantine the Great.
Camden.

PA'NEL. n. s. [panellum, Latin; panneau,
French.]

1. A square, or piece of any matter inserted between other bodies.

The chariot was all of cedar, save that the fore end had panels of sapphires, set in borders of gold.
Bacon.

Maximilian his whole history is digested into twenty-four square panels of sculpture in bas relief.
Addison on Italy.

This fellow will join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shunk panel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakespeare.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the panel split.
Swift.

2. [Panel, panellum, Latin; panneau of the French panne, id est, pellis or peau, a piece or pane in English.] A schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff provides to pass upon a trial. And empannelling a jury, is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book. Corwell.

Then twelve of such as are indifferent, and are returned upon the principal panel, or the tales, are sworn to try the same, according to evidence.
Hale's History of England.

PANG. n. s. [either from pain, or bang, Dutch, uneasy.] Extreme pain; sudden paroxysm of torment.

Say, that some lady
Hath for your love as great a pang of heart,
As you have for Olivia. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

See how the pangs of death do make him grin.
Shakespeare.

Suff'rance made Almost each pang a death. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Farth tremble from her entrails, as again,
In pangs; and unwilling gave a second groan. Milton.

Juno, pitying her disastrous fate,
Sends Iris down, her pangs to mitigate. Denham.

My son advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pang, without birth, and fruitless industry. Dryden.

I will give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair. Addison.

I saw the hoary traitor
Grin in the pangs of death, and bite the ground.
Addison.

Ah! come not, write not, think not once of me;
Nor share one pang of all I felt for thee. Pope.

PA'NG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment cruelly.

If fortune divorces
It from the bearer; 'tis a pa'ng rance panging,
As soul and body's parting. Shakespeare.

I grieve myself
To think, when thou shalt be dislogg'd by her,
Whom now thou trust'st on, how thy memory
Will then be pa'ng'd by me. Shakespeare.

PA'NICK. adj. [from pan, groundless fears being supposed to be sent by pan.]
Violent without cause, applied to fear.

The sudden stir and panick fear, when chance etern was carried away by Reynard. Camden's Remains.

Which many respect to be but a panick terror,
and men do fear they justly know not what.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I left the city in a pa'nic flight;
Lions they are in council, lambs in fight. Dryden.

PA'NICK. n. s. [panick.] A sudden fright without cause.

PANNADE. n. s. The curvet of a horse.

A panneel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,
With line to fetch litter, and halters for head. Tupper.

His strutting ribs on both sides show'd
Like furrows he himself had plow'd;
For underneath the skirt of pannel,
Twixt every two there was a channel. Hudibras.

PA'NNEL. n. s. The stomach of a hawk.
Ainsworth.

PA'NNICLE. } n. s. A plant.

PA'NNICK. } n. s. A plant.

The pannick is a plant of the millet kind, differing from that, by the disposition of the flowers and seeds, which, of this, grow in a close thick spike; it is sowed in several parts of Europe, in the fields, as corn, for the sustenance of the inhabitants, it is frequently used in particular places of Germany to make bread. Miller.

September is shown with a cheerful countenance;
in his left hand a handful of millet, oats, and pan- nick. Præbium.

Pannick affords a soft demulcent nourishment.
Ashbourn.

PA'NNIER. n. s. [panier, French.] A basket; a wicker vessel, in which fruit, or other things, are carried on a horse.

The worthless brute
Now turns a mill, or drags a loaded life,
Beneath two panniers, and a baker's wife. Dryden.

We have resolv'd to take away their whole club in a pair of panniers, and imprison them in a cupboard. Addison.

PA'NOPLY. n. s. [πανοπλία.] Complete

Steele.

2. Having the nature or form of a parabola. [from parabola.]

The pillowed seat of the excelsior does not lie in the same superficies with the water, but rises up a hillock above its level, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure.

Ray.

The bow of the rainbow is a parabolical curve.

Locke.

PARABOLICALLY. adv. [from parabola.]

1. By way of parable or similitude.

These words, notwithstanding parabolically intended, admit no literal sense.

Locke.

2. In the form of a parabola.

PARABOLISM. n. f. In algebra, the division of the terms of an equation, by a known quantity that is involved or multiplied in the terms.

Diaz.

PARABOLOID. n. f. [παράβολοειδής and ἰδω.]

A paraboloid curve in geometry, whose ordinates are supposed to be in duplicate, subquadruplicate, &c. ratio of their respective abscissae: there is another species; for if you suppose the diameter, multiplied into the square of the abscissae, to be equal to the cube of the ordinate; then the curve is called a semicircular paraboloid.

Harris.

PARACENTESIS. n. f. [παράκέντησις, παράκέντησις, to pierce; paracentese, Fr.]

That operation, whereby any of the venters are perforated to let out any matter; as tapping in a tympany.

Quincy.

PARACENTRICAL. adj. [παράκέντρικος and κεντρικός, paracentrick, Fr.] Deviating from circularity.

Since the planets move in the elliptick orbits, in one of which four revolutions, and, by a radius from the sun, describe equal areas in equal times, we must but cut slaw for the paracentrick motion, that may make the orbits circular.

Chyren.

PARADE. n. f. [parade, French.]

1. Shew; ostentation.

He is not led forth as to a review, but as to a battle, nor a parade for parade, but execution.

The cherubim stood arm'd To their night watches in parade.

Milton.

4. Place where troops draw up to do duty and mount guard.

5. Guard; posture of defence.

As from him to make judgment of men by their parade, which often shews itself in little things, when they are not in parade, and upon their guard.

Locke on Education.

PARADIGM. n. f. [παράδειγμα.] Example.

PARADISIACAL. adj. [from paradise.] Designating paradise; making paradise.

The paradisiacal situation of paradisiacal earth in reference to the sea.

Burnet.

Such a mediocrity of heat would be so far from exalting the earth to a more happy and paradisiacal state, that it would turn it to a barren wilderness.

Woodward's Natural History.

The summer is a kind of heaven, when we wander in a paradise among groves and gardens, but, at these seasons, we are like our poor first parents, toiled out of that agreeable, though solitary life, and forced to look about for more people to help to bear our labours, to get into warmer houses, and live together in cities.

Pope.

PARADISE. n. f. [παράδεισος; paradise, French.]

1. The blissful regions, in which the first pair was placed.

Longer in that paradise to dwell, The law I gave to nature him forbids.

Milton.

2. Any place of felicity.

Consideration, like an angel, came, And with the offending Adam out of him; Leaving his body as a paradise.

Shakespeare.

The paradise and contain celestial spirits.

Shakespeare.

If he should lead her into a paradise, it were even so to lead her into a paradise.

Shakespeare.

Is mortal paradise of such sweet flesh?

Shakespeare.

The earth shall all be paradise, far happier place Than this of idleness, and far happier days.

Milton.

PARADOX. n. f. [paradoxe, French; παράδοξος.] A tenet contrary to received opinion; an assertion contrary to appearance; a position in appearance absurd.

A gloss there is to colour that paradox, and make it appear in shew not to be altogether unreasonable.

Hooker.

You unlearn too strict a paradox, Striving to make an ugly deed look fair.

Shakespeare.

"It is an unnatural paradox in the doctrine of causes, that evil should proceed from goodness."

Holmes.

In their love of God, men can never be too affectionate; it is as true, though it may seem a paradox, that in their hatred of sin, men may be sometimes too passionate.

Spratt.

'Tis not possible for any man in his wits, though never so much addicted to paradoxes, to believe otherwise, but that the whole is greater than the part; that contradictions cannot be both true; that three and three make six, that four is more than three.

Williams.

PARADOXICAL. adj. [from paradox.]

1. Having the nature of a paradox.

What hath been every where opinioned by all men, is more than paradoxical to dispute.

Brown.

Strange it is, how the curiosity of men, that have been active in the instruction of beasts, among those many paradoxical and unheard-of imitations, should not attempt to make one speak.

Brown.

These will seem strange and paradoxical to one that takes a prospect of the world.

Norris.

2. Inclined to new tenets, or notions contrary to received opinions.

PARADOXICALLY. adv. [from paradox.]

In a paradoxical manner; in a manner contrary to received opinions.

If their vanity of approving singular puts them upon advancing paradoxes, and proving them as paradoxically, they are usually laughed at.

Collins.

PARADOXICALNESS. n. f. [from paradox.] State of being paradoxical.

PARADOXOLOGY. n. f. [from paradox.]

The use of paradoxes.

Perpend the difficulty, which obscurity, or unavoidable paradoxology, must put upon the attempt.

Brown.

PARAGOGUE. n. f. [παράγωγος; paragoge, French.] A figure whereby a letter or syllable is added at the end of a word, without adding any thing to the sense of it: as, vast, vastly.

Dick.

PARAGON. n. f. [paragon, from parage, equality, old French; paragone, Ital.]

1. A model; a pattern; something supremely excellent.

An angel or, if not,

An earthly paragon.

Shakespeare.

Turns was never graced before with such a paragon to their queen.

Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. Companion; fellow.

Alone he rode without his paragon.

Spenser.

TO PARAGON. v. a. [paragonner, Fr.]

1. To compare; to parallel; to mention in competition.

The picture of Pamela, in little form, he wore in a tablet, purposing to paragon the little one with Artista's length; not doubting but, even in that little quantity, the excellency of that would shine through the weakness of the other.

Saunders.

I will give thee bloody teeth,

If thou with Cæsar paragon again

My man of men.

Shakespeare.

Proud seat

Of Lucifer, so by allusion call'd

Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd.

Milton.

2. To equal; to be equal to.

He hath achiev'd a maid

That paragon description and wild fame;

One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens.

Shakespeare.

We will wear our mortal state with her,

Catharine our queen, before the first creature

That a paragon d'it' world.

Shakespeare.

PARAGRAPH. n. f. [paragraphe, Fr.

παράγραφη.]

παράγραφον.] A distinct part of a discourse.

On his last paragraph, I have transcribed the most important parts.

PARAGRAPHEMICALLY. adv. [from paragraph.] By paragraphs; with distinct breaks or divisions.

PARALLACTICAL. adj. [from parallax.] PARALLACTICK. lax. Pertaining to a parallax.

PARALLAX. n. f. [παράλλαξις.] The distance between the true and apparent place of the sun, or any star viewed from the surface of the earth.

By what strange parallax or optick skill
Of vision multiply'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Light moves from the sun to us in about seven or eight minute time, which distance is about 7 millions of English miles, supposing the horizontal distance of the sun to be about twelve seconds.

Newton's Opticks.

PARALLEL. adj. [παράλληλος; parallelus, French.]

1. Extended in the same direction, and preserving always the same distance.

Disturbing the order and theory of causes, perpendicular to their effects, he draws them aside into things where they run parallel, and their proper motions would never meet together. Brown.

2. Having the same tendency.

When honour runs parallel with the law of God and our country, it cannot be too much cherished; but when the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they are the great deprivations of human nature. Addison.

3. Continuing the resemblance through many particulars; equal; like.

The foundation principle of perpetuicism is exactly parallel to an acknowledged nothing.

Glanville.

I shall observe something parallel to the wooing and wedding suit in the behaviour of persons of figure.

Addison.

In the parallel place before quoted.

Lesly.

Compare the words and phrases in one place of an author, with the same in other places of the same author, which are generally called parallel places.

Watts.

PARALLEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Line continuing its course, and still remaining at the same distance from another line.

Who made the spider parallel design,
Sure as De Moivre, without rule or line? Pope.

2. Line on the globe marking the latitude.

3. Direction conformable to that of another line.

Diffusions, like small streams, are first begun, Scarce then they rise, but gather as they run; So lines, that from their parallel decline, More they proceed, the more they still disjoin.

Guthrie.

4. Resemblance; conformity continued through many particulars; likeness.

Such a resemblance of all parts,
Life, death, age, fortune, nature, arts;
She lights her torch at theirs to tell,
And shew the world this parallel.

Denham.

'Twixt earthly females and the moon,
All parallels exactly run.

Swift's Miscellany.

5. Comparison made.

The parallel holds in the gainfulness, as well as laboriousness of the work.

Diccy of Pity.

A reader cannot be more rationally entertained, than by comparing and drawing a parallel between his own private character, and that of other persons.

Addison.

6. Any thing resembling another.

Thou ungrateful brute, if thou wouldst find thy parallel, go to hell, which is both the region and the emblem of ingratitude.

South.

For work, like thee, let death's journals tell,
None but thyself can be thy parallel.

Pope.

PARALLEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place, so as always to keep the same direction with another line.

The Azores having a middle situation between these continents and that vast tract of America, the needle seemeth equally distracted by both, and diverting unto neither, doth parallel and place itself upon the true meridian.

Brown.

2. To keep in the same direction; to level.

The loyal sufferers abroad became subjected to the worst effect of banishment, and even there expelled and driven from their habitations, to paralleling in their exiles the most immediate objects of that monster's fury.

Fill.

His line is parallel'd
E'en with the stroke and line of his great justice.

Stoughton.

3. To correspond to.

That he stretched out the north over the empty places, seems to parallel the expansion of David, he stretching out the earth upon the waters.

Burns.

4. To be equal to; to resemble through many particulars.

In the fire, the destruction was so swift, sudden, vast, and miserable, as nothing can parallel in story.

Dryden.

5. To compare.

I parallel'd more than once, our idea of substance, with the Indian philosopher's he-knew-not-what, which supported the tortoise.

Locke.

PARALLELISM. n. f. [parallelisme, Fr. from parallel.] State of being parallel.

The parallelism and due proportioned inclination of the axis of the earth.

More's Divine Dial.

Speaking of the parallelism of the axis of the earth, I demand, whether it be better to have the axis of the earth steady and perpetually parallel to itself, or to have it carelessly tumble this way and that way?

Ray on the Creation.

PARALLELOGRAM. n. f. [παράλληλον and γραμμή; parallelograme, French.]

In geometry, a right lined quadrilateral figure, whose opposite sides are parallel and equal.

Harris.

The experiment we made in a loadstone of a parallelogram, or long figure, wherein only inverting the extremes, as it came out of the fire, we altered the poles.

Brown.

We may have a clear idea of the area of a parallelogram, without knowing what relation it bears to the area of a triangle.

Watts.

PARALLELOGRAMICAL. adj. [from parallelogram.] Having the properties of a parallelogram.

PARALLELOPIPED. n. f. [from parallelipede, French.] A solid figure contained under six parallelograms, the opposites of which are equal and parallel; or it is a prism, whose base is a parallelogram: it is always triple to a pyramid of the same base and height.

Harris.

Two prisms alike in shape I tied so, that their axes and opposite sides being parallel, they composed a parallelipiped.

Newton.

Crytals that hold lead are yellowish, and of a cubic or parallelipiped figure.

Woodward.

PARALOGISM. n. f. [παράλογισμος; paralogisme, Fr.] A false argument.

'That because they have not a bladder of gall, like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paralogism not admissible, a fallacy that dwells not in a cloud, and needs not the sun to scatter it.

Brown's Falgar Errors.

Modern writers, making the drachma less than the denarius, others equal, have been deceived by a double paralogism, in standing too nicely upon the bare words of the ancients, without examining the things.

Abraham.

If a syllogism agree with the rule, give us the construction of it, it is called a true argument. If it disagree with these rules, it is a paralogism, or false argument.

Watts.

PARALOGY. n. f. False reasoning.

That Methuselah was the longest lived of all the posterity of Adam, we quickly believe, but that he must needs be so, is perhaps below judgment to deny.

Brown.

PARALYSIS. n. f. [παράλυσις; paralytic, French.] A palsy.

PARALYTICAL. adj. [from paralysis; PARALYTICK. lax. paralytique, French.]

Palsied; inclined to palsy.

Nought shall in profit, that the charming fair,
Angelic, softer work of heav'n, draws
To the cold flaking paralytic hand, Senseless of beauty.

Pr.

If a nerve be cut, or straightly bound, that goes to any muscle, that muscle shall immediately lose its motion; which is the cure of paralysis.

Fahim.

The difficulties of breathing and swallowing, without any tumour after long diseases, proceed commonly from a retolusion or paralytic disposition of the parts.

Abraham.

PARAMETER. n. f. The latus rectum of a parabola, is a third proportional to the abscissa and any ordinate; so that the square of the ordinate is always equal to the rectangle under the parameter and abscissa: but, in the ellipsis and hyperbola, it has a different proportion.

Harris.

PARAMOUNT. adj. [per and mount.]

1. Superiour; having the highest jurisdiction: as, lord paramount, the chief of the feigniory: with to.

Leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to obligation of sovereignty, and make the king, tanquam unus ex nobis.

Bacon.

The dogmatist's opinioned assurance is paramount to argument.

Glanville.

If all power be derived from Adam, by divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government; and therefore the positive laws of men cannot determine that which is itself the foundation of all law.

Locke.

Mankind, seeing the apostles possessed of a power plainly paramount to the powers of all the known kings, whether angels, or demons, could not question their being inspired by God.

Watts.

2. Eminent; of the highest order.

John a Chamber was hanged upon a gibbet raised a stage higher in the midst of a square below, as a traitor paramount; and a number of his chief accomplices were hanged upon the lower story round him.

Bacon.

PARAMOUNT. n. f. The chief.

In order came the grand internal powers,
'Midst came their mighty paramounts.

Watts.

PARAMOUR. n. f. [par and amour, Fr.]

1. A lover or wooer.

Upon the floor

A lovely berry of last ladies' fat,
Conjunct of many a jolly paramour,
The wench them did in modesty re-mate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate.

Spenser.

No reason then for her

To wanton with the sun her lusty paramour.

Mil.

2. A mistress. It is obsolete in both senses, though not inelegant or unmusical.

Shall I believe

That unsubstantial death is amorous,

And that the lean abhorred monster keeps Thee here in dark to be his paramour; Shakspeare.
PARANYPHE. n. f. [παράνυφος and παράνυφος, paranympe, French.]

1. A bridegroom; one who leads the bride to her marriage.

The Timbrian bride

Had not so soon preferred

Thy paranympe, wouldst thou to thee compar'd,

Succession in thy bed. Milton's Agamemnon.

2. One who countenances or supports another.

Thou hath got a paranympe and a solicitor, a variant and an advocate. Taylor's Works by Comm.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις, παράφρασις, paraphrase, French.] A brazen table fixed to a pillar, on which laws and proclamations were anciently engraved; also a table set up publicly, containing an account of the rising and setting of the stars, eclipses of the sun and moon, the seasons of the year, &c. whence astrologers give this name to the tables, on which they draw figures according to their art.

Philips.

Our forefathers, observing the course of the sun, and marking certain mutations to be in his progress through the zodiac, set them down in these paraphrases, or astronomical canons. Brown.

PARAPET. n. f. [παράπετος, parapet,
petra, Italian.] A wall breast high.

There was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth to restrain the petulance of our words.

Ben Jonson.

PARAPHIMOSIS. n. f. [παράφωσις; para- phimosis, Fr.] A disease when the preputium cannot be drawn over the glans.

PARAPHERNALIA. n. f. [Lat. para- pherna, Fr.] Goods in the wife's disposal.

PARAPHRASE. n. f. [παράφρασις; para- phrasia, Fr.] A loose interpretation;
an explanation in many words.

All the laws of nations were but a paraphrase upon this standing rectitude of nature, that was ready to enlarge itself into suitable determinations, upon all emergent objects and occasions. South.

In paraphrase, or translation with latitude, the author's words are not so strictly followed as his sense, and that too amplified, but not altered:
such is Mr. Warton's translation of Virgil's fourth Æneid. Dryden.

TO PARAPHRASE. v. a. [paraphraser, French; παράφρασις.] To interpret with latitude of expression, to translate loosely.

We are permitted to paraphrase our own words, to give ourselves room for the licence and richness of our advantages. Shakspeare.

What might paraphrase of that we mean?

Where translation is more literal, they may paraphrase.—But it is inevitable, that, under a paraphrase of paraphrasing and translating, a way should be offered of treating authors to a manifest disadvantage. Pope in the Crit.

PARAPHRASE. s. c. [paraphrase, Fr.
παράφρασις.] A interpreter; one who explains in many words.

The best for public audience are such, as, following a middle course between the rigor of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrase, select a few numbers and plain notes, deliver the sense. Locke.

Children paraphrase renders Cato by Athenian.

PARAPHRASICAL. adj. [from para- phrasia.] Lax in interpretation; not literal; not verbal.

PARAPHRENTIS. n. f. [παράφρενσις and παράφρενσις, paraphrentis, French.]

Paraphrentis is an inflammation of the diaphragm. The symptoms are a violent fever, a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot.

PARAQUETO. n. f. A little parrot.

PARASANGA. n. f. [parasang.] A Persian measure of length.

Since the mind is not able to frame an idea of any space without parts, instead thereof it makes use of the common measure, which, by familiar use, in each country, have imprinted themselves on the memory; as inches and feet, or cubits and parasang. Locke.

PARASITE. n. f. [parasite, French;
parasita, Lat.] One that frequents rich tables, and craves his welcome by flattery.

He is a flatterer,

A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who grins would dissolve the bands of life,
Which life hopes longer. Shakspeare.

Moll smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Coarctate destroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
You fools of fortune. Shakspeare.

Diogenes, when mice came about him, as he was eating, said, I see that even Diogenes nourishes his parasites. Bacon.

Thou, with trembling fear,
Or like a tawny parasite, obey'd;
Thy to thyself scarce fit the truth foretold. Milton.
The people live at not for their king's delight,
To curb a puppy, or raise a parasite. Dryden.

PARASITICAL. adj. [parasitique, Fr.
parasitic, from parasite.] Flattering; wheedling.

The bishop received small thanks for his para- sitic presentation. Hakewell on Providence.

Some parasitic preachers have dared to call their martyrs, who died fighting against me.

King Charles.

PARASOL. n. f. A small canopy or umbrello carried over the head, to shelter from rain and the heat of the sun. Di.

PARASYNEXIS. n. f. In the civil law, a conventicle or unlawful meeting. Di.

TO PARBOIL. v. a. [parbouiller, French.]
To half boil; to boil in part.

Parboil two large capons upon a soft fire, by the space of an hour, till, in effect, all the blood be gone. Bacon.

From the sea into the ship we turn,
Like parboil'd wretches, on the coals to burn.

Donne.

Like the scum starved men did draw
From parboil'd shoes and boots. Donne.

TO PARBREAK. v. n. [brecker, Dutch.]
To vomit. Obsolete.

PARBRIAL. n. f. [from the verb.] Vomit. Obsolete.

Her filthy parbrials all the place defiled has.

Spenser.

PARCEL. n. f. [parcelle, French; par- ticula, Latin.]

1. A small bundle.
2. A part of the whole; part taken separately.

Women, Silenus, had they mark'd him
In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To lay in love with him. Shakspeare.

I drew from her a parcel of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage relate;
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctly. Shakspeare's Othello.

A inventory of an importing,
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuff and ornaments of household. Shak.

With what face could such a great man have begged such a parcel of the crown lands, one a vast sum of money, another the forfeited estate?

Davenant.

I have known pensions given to particular persons, any one of which, if divided into smaller parcels,
and distributed to those who distinguish themselves
by wit or learning, would answer the end. Deu fr.

The same experiment succeed on two parcels of the white of an egg, only it grows somewhat thicker upon mixing with an acid. Arbuthnot.

3. A quantity or mass.

What can be rationally conceived in so transparent a substance as water for the production of these colours, besides the various sizes of its fluid and globular parcels? Newton.

4. A number of persons: in contempt.

This youthful parcel

Of noble batchelors stand about, bestowing. Shakspeare.

5. Any number or quantity: in contempt.

They came to this conclusion; that unless they could, by a parcel of fair words and pretences, engage them into a confederacy, there was no good to be done. L'Estrange.

TO PARCEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide into portions.

If they allot and parcel out several perfections to several duties, do they not, by this, admit contradictions, making duty only to such a measure perfect? whereas a duty implies perfection beyond all measure. South.

Those gloriolous kings would parcel out my power,
And all the raptures of my land devour. Dryden.

2. To make up into a mass.

What a wounding shame, that mine own servant should parcel the sum of my disgrace by addition of his envy! Shakspeare.

PARCELNER. n. f. [In common law.]

When one dies possessed of an estate, and having issue only daughters, or his sisters be his heirs; so that the lands descend to those daughters or sisters:
these are called parcelners, and are but as one heir. Di.

PARCENARY. n. f. [from parcener, Fr.]

A holding or occupying of land by more persons pro indiviso, or by joint tenants, otherwise called coparceners:
for if they refuse to divide their common inheritance, and chuse rather to hold it jointly, they are said to hold in parcenary. Cowell.

TO PARCH. v. a. [from παρακαίνω, says

Junius; from percequo, says Skinner:
neither of them seem satisfied with their conjecture: perhaps from perustus, burnt, to perust, to parch; perhaps from parcament, the effect of fire upon parchment being almost proverbial.]
To burn slightly and superficially; to scorch; to dry up.

Hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrail,
That not a tear can fill? Shakspeare.

Did he so often lodge in open field
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,

To conquer France? Shakspeare Henry IV.

Torrid heat,

And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Milton.

I'm stupor'd with sorrow, past relief
Of tears; parch'd up and wither'd with my grief.

Dryden.

Without this circular motion of our earth, our hemispheres would be continued to perpetuate cold and darkness, the other continually roasted and parch'd by the sun beams. Ray.

The Sun an star

With his sultry breath infects the sky;
The ground below is parch'd, the heavens above us
dry. Dryden.

Lu.

Full fifty years

I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the severer heats of parching summer. Rome.
The skin grows parched and dry, and the whole body lean and meagre. Blackmore.
A man distressed with thirst in the parch'd places of the wilderness, searches every pit, but finds no water. R. G. 11.

To PARCH. v. n. To be scorched.

We were better parch in Asick sun,
Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes. Shak.
If to prevent the acrospiring, it be thrown thin,
many corals will dry and parch into barley. Martin.

PARCHMENT. n. f. [parchemin, French, pergamena, Latin.] Skins dressed for the writer. Among traders, the skins of sheep are called parchment, those of calves vellum.

Is not this a lamentable thing, that the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment; that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

In the coffin, that had the books, they were found as fresh as if newly written, being written in parchment, and covered with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Like flying shades before the clouds we flew,
We shrink like parchment in consuming flame. Dryden.

PARCHMENT-MAKER. n. f. [parchment and maker.] He who dresses parchment.PARD. } n. f. [pardus, pardalis, Lat.]
PARDAL. } The leopard; in poetry, any of the spotted beasts.

The pardal swift, and the tyger cruel. Spenser.
As fox to lambs, as wolf to better's calf,
As pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son. Shakespeare.

Ten brace of grey-hounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair,

A match for pards in flight, in grappling for the bear. Dryden.

To PARDON. v. a. [pardonner, Fr.]

1. To excuse an offender.
When I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardon'd you. Dryden.
2. To forgive a crime.
I will pardon all their inquiries. Jeremiah.
Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong,
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. To remit a penalty.
That thou may'st see the difference of our spirit,
I pardon thee thy life before thou ask it. Shakespeare.
4. Pardon me, is a word of civil denial, or slight apology.
Sir, pardon me, it is a letter from my brother. Shakespeare.

PARDON. n. f. [pardon, French; from the verb.]

1. Forgiveness of an offender.
2. Forgiveness of a crime.
He that pleads great men, shall get pardon for iniquity. Luther xx. 27.
A slight pamphlet, about the elements of architecture, hath been entertained with some good among my friends. Milton.
But infinite in pardon is my judge. Milton.
What better can we do than prostrate fall
Before him reverent, and there confess Humbly our faults, and pardon beg, with tears
Wat'ring the ground? Milton.
There might you see
Indulgencies, dispensies, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.
3. Remission of penalty.
4. Forgiveness received.
A man may be safe as to his condition, but, in the mean time, dark and doubtful as to his apprehensions: secure in his garden, but miserable in the ignorance of it, and to passing all his days in the disconsolate, uneasy vicissitudes of hopes and fear, at length go out of the world, not knowing whither he goes. South.

5. Variant of forgiveness, or exemption from punishment.

The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakespeare's King Lear.
PARDONABLE. adj. [pardonable, French;
from pardon.] Venial; excusable.

That which we do being evil, notwithstanding ing by so much more pardonable, by how much the exigencies of so doing, or the difficulty of doing otherwise, is greater, unless this necessity or difficulty have originally risen from ourselves. Hooker.

A blind man sitting in the chimney corner is pardonable enough, but sitting at the helm, he is intolerable. South.

What English readers, unacquainted with Greek or Latin, will believe me, when we confess we derive all that is pardonable in us from ancient fountains? Dryden.

PARDONABLENESS. n. f. [from pardonable.] Venialness; susceptibility of pardon.

Saint John's word is, all sin is transgression of the law; Saint Paul's, the wages of sin is death:
put these two together, and this conceit of the natural pardonableness of sin vanishes away. Hail.

PARDONABLY. adv. [from pardonable.]
Venially; excusably.

I may judge when I write more or less pardon-ably. Dryden.

PARDONER. n. f. [from pardon.]

1. One who forgives another.
This is his pardon, purchas'd by such sin,
For which the pardoner himself is in. Shakespeare.
2. One of the fellows that carried about the pope's indulgencies, and sold them to such as would buy them, against whom Luther incensed the people of Germany. Conuel.

To PARE. v. a. [This word is reasonably deduced by Skinner from the French phrase, parer les ongles, to dress the horses hoofs when they are shaved by the farrier: thus we first said, pare your nails; and from thence transferred the word to general use.] To cut off extremities of the surface; to cut away by little and little; to diminish. If pare be used before the thing diminished, it is followed immediately by its accusative; if it precedes the thing taken away, or agrees in the passive voice with the thing taken away, as a nominative, it then requires a particle, as away, off.

The creed of Athanasius, and that sacred hymn of glory, than which nothing doth sound more heavenly in the ears of faithful men, are now reckoned as superfluities, which we must in any case pare away, lest we cloy God with too much service. Hooker.

I have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home;
But par'd my present havings to bestow
My bounties upon you. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
I am a man, whom fortune hath cruelly scratch'd.
—'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Shakespeare.
The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paw all par'd away. Shakespeare.
The king began to pare a little the privilege of clergy, ordaining that clerks convict should be burned in the hand. Bacon's Henry VII.
Pick out of tales the mirth, but not the sin,
He pares his apple, that will cleanly feed. Herbert.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must first look into his own, he must pare off whatsoever is unright, and not without holiness approach to the holiest of all holies. Taylor.

All the mountains were pared off the earth, and the surface of it lay even, or in an equal con-vexity every where with the surface of the sea. Burnet.

The most poetical parts, which are description and images, were to be pared away, when the body was swollen into too large a bulk for the representation of the stage. Dryden.

The sword, as it was justly drawn by us, so can it force us to be sheathed, till the power of the great trouble of our peace be so far pared and reduced, as that we may be under no apprehensions.

Atterbury.
'Twere well if she would pare her nails. Pope.

PARACORICK. adj. [παράκορικός.] Having the power in medicine to comfort, mollify, and assuage. *Diff.*PARENCHYMA. n. f. [παργχυμα.]
A spongy or porous substance; in physick, a part through which the blood is strained for its better fermentation and perfection. *Diff.*PARENCHYMATOUS. } adj. [from paren-chyma.] Relating to the parenchyma; spongy.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant hat's-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn. Now the covers and true body of each seed, the paren-chymatous and ligneous parts of both moderately multiplied, afford an hundred thousand millions of formed atoms in the space of a pepper-corn. Grew.

Those parts, formerly reckoned parenchymatous, are now found to be bundles of exceedingly small threads. Clyne.

PARENÉTICK. [παραινέτικός.] Hortatory.
PARENESIS. n. f. [παράλησις.] Persuasion; exhortation. *Diff.*PARENT. n. f. [parent, French; parens, Latin.] A father or mother.

All true virtues are to honour true religion as their parent, and all well ordered commonwealths to love her as their chiefest stay. Hooker.

His custom was, during the warmer season of the year, to spend an hour before evening-prayer in teaching, whereat the parents and older sort were wont to be present. Fille.

As a publick parent of the state,
My justice, and thy crime, requires thy fate. Dryden.
In vain on the dissembled mother's tongue
Had cunning art, and sly persuasion hung,
And real care in vain and native love
In the true parent's panting breast had strove. Prior.

PARENTAGE. n. f. [parentage, French;
from parent.] Extraction; birth; condition with respect to the rank of parents.

A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demerits, youthful and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

Though men esteem the low of parentage,
Thy father is th' Eternal King. Milton.
To his loves go,

And from himself your parentage may know. Dryden.
We find him not only boasting of his parentage, as an Israelite at large, but particularizing his decent from Benjamin. Atterbury.

PARENTAL. adj. [from parent.] Becoming parents; pertaining to parents.

It overthrows the careful course and parental provision of nature, whereby the young ones, newly excluded, are sustained by the dam. Brown.

These eggs hatched by the warmth of the sun into little worms, feed without any need of parental care. Dryden.

Young ladies, on whom parental controul sits heavily, give a man of intrigue room to think that they want to be parents. Clayton.

PARENTO

PARENTATION. n. f. [from parento, Latin.] Something done or said in honour of the dead.

PARENTHESIS. n. f. [parenthesis, Fr. παρενθεσις, ἡ, and τις.] A sentence so included in another sentence, as that it may be taken out, without injuring the sense of that which incloses it: being commonly marked thus, ( ).

In vain is my person excepted by a parenthesis of words, when so many are aimed against me with sword.

In his Indian relations, are contained strange and incredible accounts, he seldom mentioned, without a derogatory parenthesis, in any author. Brown.

Thou shalt be seen,
The with some short parenthesis between,
High on the throne of wit.

Don't suffer every occasional thought to carry you away into a long parenthesis, and thus stretch out your discourse, and divert you from the point in hand.

PARENTHETICAL. adj. [from parenthesis.] Pertaining to a parenthesis.

PARER. n. f. [from pare.] An instrument to cut away the surface.

A hone and a parer, like sole of a boot,
To pare away grafts, and to raise up the root.

PARERGY. n. f. [παρηγορη and εργον.] Something unimportant; something done by the by.

Scripture being serious, and commonly omitting such parergies, it will be unreasonable to condemn all laughter.

PARGET. n. f. Plaster laid upon roofs of rooms.

Gold was the parget, and the ceiling bright
Did shine all fealy with great plates of gold;
The floor with risp and enamel was dight. Spenser.
Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaster or parget, the finer, spaid.

TO PARGET. v. a. [from the noun.] To plaster; to cover with plaster.

There are not more arts of disguising our corporeal blemishes than our moral, and yet, while we thus paint and parget our own deformities, we cannot allow any the least imperfection of another's to remain undetected.

PARGETER. n. f. [from parget.] A plasterer.

PARHELION. n. f. [παρηλια and ἡλιος.] A mock sun.

To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it, that we so doat on in the creature, is as absurd, as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion, instead of adoring the sun.

PARITAL. adj. [from pari, Latin.] Constituting the sides, or walls.

The lower part of the parietal and upper part of the temporal bones were fractured.

PARIETARY. n. f. [parietaire, French.] An herb.

PARING. n. f. [from pare.] That which is pared off any thing; the rind.

Virginity breeds mites, much like a cheese, and consumes itself to a very paring.

To his guest thou art a paring,
He eat himself the rind of thee.
In May, after rain, the surface of the earth, and with the parings raise your hill high, and enlarge their breadth.

IS. n. f. [aconitum.] An herb.

ISH. n. f. [parochia, low Latin, French; of the Greek παροικια, um conventus, accleratus, sacra

vicinia.] The particular charge of a secular priest. Every church is either cathedral, conventual, or parochial: cathedral is that where there is a bishop seated, so called a cathedra: conventual consists of regular clerks, professing some order of religion, or of a dean and chapter, or other college of spiritual men: parochial is that which is instituted for saying divine service, and administering the holy sacraments to the people dwelling within a certain compass of ground near unto it. Our realm was first divided into parishes by Honorius, archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 636.

Dametas came piping and dancing, the merriest man in a parish.

By the Catholic church is meant no more than the common church, into which all such persons as belonged to that parish, in which it was built, were wont to congregate.

The tythe, his parish freely paid, he took,
But never ludd, or curs'd with bell or book.

PARISH. adj.

1. Belonging to the parish; having the care of the parish.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend, and religious man.
Not parish clerk, who calls the psalms to clear.

The office of the church is performed by the parish priest, at the time of his interment.

A man, after his natural death, was not capable of the least parish office.

The parish allowance to poor people, is very seldom a comfortable maintenance.

2. Maintained by the parish.

The ghost and the parish girl are entire new characters.

PARISHIONER. n. f. [parishien, French; from parish.] One that belongs to the parish.

I praise the Lord for you, and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you.

Had bishop Valentine, what day this is,
All the air is the diocese;
And all the living creatures
And other birds are thy parishioners.

In the greater our parishes, many of the parishioners, through neglect, do perish.

I have deposited thirty marks, to be distributed among the poor parishioners.

PARITOR. n. f. [for apparitor.] A beadle; a summoner of the courts of civil law.

You shall be summoned by an host of paritors; you shall be sentenced in the spiritual court.

PARTY. n. f. [parité, French; paritas, Latin.] Equality; resemblance.

We may here justly tax the dishonesty and shamefulness of the mouths, who have upbraided us with the opinion of a certain stoical party of sin.

That Christ or his apostles ever commanded to set up such a party of presbyters, and in such a way as those Scots endeavour, I think is not very disputable.

Survey the total set of animals, and we may, in their legs or organs of progression, observe an equality of length and party of numeration, not any to have an odd leg, or the movers of one side not exactly answered by the other.

Those accidental occurrences, which excited So crates to the discovery of such an invention, might fall in with that man that is of a perfect party with Socrates.

This agreement, in essential characters, makes rather an identity than a party.

Women could not live in that parity and equality of expence with their husbands, as now they do.

By an exact parity of reason, we may argue, if a man has no sense of those kindneses that put upon him, from one like himself, whom he loves and knows, how much less shall his heart be affected with the grateful sense of his favours, whom he converses with only by imperfect speculations, by the discourses of reason, or the discoveries of faith?

PARK. n. f. [peaynuc, Saxon; parc, French.] A piece of ground inclosed and stored with wild beasts of chase, which a man may have by prescription or the king's grant. Manwood, in his forest-law, defines it thus: a park is a place for privilege for wild beasts of venery, and also for other wild beasts that are beasts of the forest and of the chase: and those wild beasts are to have a firm peace and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them within the park, without license of the owner: a park is of another nature, than either a chase or a warren; for a park must be inclosed, and may not lie open; if it does, it is a good cause of seizure into the king's hands: and the owner cannot have action against such as hunt in his park, if it lies open.

We have parks and inclosures of all sorts of beasts and birds, which we use not only for view or recreation, but likewise for dissections and trials.

TO PARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To inclose as in a park.

How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale?
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs.

PARKER. n. f. [from park.] A park-keeper.

PARKLEAVES. n. f. An herb.

PARLE. n. f. [from parler, Fr.] Conversation; talk; oral treaty; oral discussion of any thing.

Of all the gentlemen,
That every day with parle encounter me,
In thy opinion, which is worthiest love?
Our trumpet call'd you to the general parle.

The bishop, by a parle, is, with a show of combination, cunningly betray'd.

Why meet we thus, like wrangling advocates,
To urge the justice of our cause with words?
I hate this parle; 'tis tame: if we must meet,
Give me my arms.

TO PARLEY. v. n. [from parler, Fr.] To treat by word of mouth; to talk; to discuss any thing orally. It is much used in war for a meeting of enemies to talk.

A Turk desired the captain to send some, with whom they might more conveniently parley.

He parleys with her a while, as imagining she would advise him to proceed.

PARLEY. n. f. [from the verb.] Oral treaty; talk; conference; discussion by word of mouth.

Seek rather by parley to recover them, than by the sword.

Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley:
A rotten case abides no handling.

Summon a parley, we will talk with him.

Let us resolve never to have any parley with our lusts, lusts, but to make some considerable progress in our repentance. Citany.

Parley and holding intelligence with guilt in the most trivial things, he pronounced as treason to ourselves, as well as unto God. Pell.

No gentle means could be essay'd;

'Twas beyond parley when the fuge was laid. Dryd.

Force never yet a generous heart did gain;

We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain. Dryd.

Yet when some better sated youth

Shall with his am'rous parley in us thee,

Reflect one moment on his truth,

Who, dying thus, persists to love thee. Prior.

PARLIAMENT. n. f. [parliamentum, low Latin; parlement, French.] In England, is the assembly of the king and three estates of the realm; namely,

the lords spiritual, the lords temporal,

and commons, for the debating of matters touching the commonwealth, especially the making and correcting of laws; which assembly or court is, of all others, the highest, and of greatest authority. Cowel.

The king is fled to London,

To call a present court of parliament. Shakspeare.

Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament house.

Shakspeare.

The true use of parlements is very excellent, and is often called, and continued as long as is necessary. Bacon.

I thought the right way of parlements the most safe for my crown, as best pleasing to my people.

King Charles.

These are mob readers: if Virgil and Martial stood for parliament men, we know who would carry

it. Dryden.

PARLIAMENTARY. adj. [from parlia- ment.] Enacted by parliament; pertaining to parliament.

To the three first titles of the two houses, or lower, and conquest, were added two more; the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon.

Many things, that obtain as common law, had their original by parliamentary acts or constitutions, made in writings by the king, lords, and commons. Hale.

Credit to run ten millions in debt, without par- liamentary security, I think to be dangerous and illegal. See fr.

PARLOUR. n. f. [parloir, French; parla-

torio, Italian.]

1. A room in monasteries, where the religious meet and converse.

2. A room in houses on the first floor, elegantly furnished for reception or entertainment.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for a man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Holker.

Back again fair Alma led them right,

And soon into a goodly parlour brought. Shens.

It would be infinitely more shameful, in the diets of the kitchen, to receive the entertainments of the parlour. South.

Roof and sides were like a parlour made

A soft recess, and a cool summer shade. Dryden.

The first, forgive my verse it to diffuse,

Perform'd the kitchen's and the parlour's use;

The second, better bolted and immur'd,

From wolves his out-door family secur'd. Harte.

PARLOUS. adj. [This might seem to come from parler, French, to speak;

but parous derives it, I think rightly, from perilous in which it answers to the Latin improbis.] Keen; sprightly;

wagglish. 7

Midas durst communicate

To none but to his wife his ears of state;

One must be trusted, and he thought her fit.

As passing prudent, and a parious wit. Dryden.

PARLOUSNESS. n. f. [from parlous.]

Quickness; keanness of temper.

PARMA-CITY. n. f. Corruptly for perma-citi. Anfanti.

PARNILL. n. f. [The diminutive of per- tronilla.] A punk; a slut. Obsolete.

Skinner.

PAROCHIAL. adj. [parochialis, from pa- rochia, low Latin.] Belonging to a parish.

The married state of parochial pastors hath given them the opportunity of sitting a more exact and universal pattern of holy living to the people committed to their charge. Atterbury.

PARODY. n. f. [parodie, Fr. παρωδια.]

A kind of writing, in which the words of an author or his thoughts are taken,

and by a slight change adapted to some new purpose.

The imitations of the ancients are added to gether with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. Pope's Dunciad.

TO PARODY. v. a. [parodier, French;

from parody.] To copy by way of parody.

I have translated, or rather parodied, a poem of Horace, in which I introduce you advising me.

Pope.

PARONYMOUS. adj. [παρωνυμος.] Resembling another word.

Shew your critical learning in the etymology of terms, the synonymous and the paronyms or kindred names. Watts.

PAROLE. n. f. [parole, French.] Word given as an assurance, promise given by a prisoner not to go away.

Love's votaries enthal each other's soul,

Till both of them live but up in parole. Guarantied.

Be very tender of your honour, and not fall in love, because I have a scruple whether you can keep your parole, if you become a prisoner to the ladies. Swift.

PARONOMASIA. n. f. [παρωνομασια.]

A rhetorical figure, in which, by the change of a letter or syllable, several things are alluded to. It is called in Latin, agnominatio. Dict.

PARROQUET. n. f. [parroquet, or perro- quet, Fr.] A small species of parrot.

The great red and blue, are parrots; the middlemost, called parroquets, and the lesser, par- roquets; in all above twenty sorts. Grew.

I would not give my parroquet

For all the doves that ever flew. Prior.

PARONYCHIA. n. f. [παρωνυχια; parony-

chia, French.] A preternatural swelling or sore under the root of the nail in one's finger; a felon; a whitlow. Dict.

PAROTID. adj. [parotide, Fr. παρωτι- δα and ωτις.] Salivary: so named because near the ears.

Beasts, and birds, having one common use of spittle, are furnished with the parotid glands, which help to supply the mouth with it. Grew.

PAROTIS. n. f. [παρωτις.] A tumour

in the glandules behind and about the ears, generally called the emunctories of the brain; though, indeed, they are the external fountains of the saliva of the mouth. Wiseman.

PAROXYSM. n. f. [παρωσμος; paroxys-

me, French.]

French.] A fit; periodical exacerbation of a disease.

I fancied to myself a kind of cast, in the change of the paroxysm. Dryden.

Amorous girls, through the fury of an hysterick

paroxysm, are cast into a trance for an hour.

The greater distance of time there is between the paroxysms, the fever is less dangerous, but more obstinate. Albucru.

PARRICIDE. n. f. [parricide, French;

parricida, Latin.]

1. One who destroys his father.

I tell him the revenging gods

'Gainst parricides did set their thunder bend;

Speke with how manifold and strong a bond

The child was bound to the father. Shakspeare.

2. One who destroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence, as his country or patron.

3. [Parricide, French, parricidium, Lat.]

The murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and likewise a good law-maker, yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues.

Bacon.

Morat was always bloody, now he's safe;

And has so far in usurpation gone,

He will by parricide secure the throne. Dryden.

PARRICIDAL. } adj. [from parricida,

PARRICIDIOUS. } Latin] Relating to parricide; committing parricide.

He is now paid in his own way, the parr- icidius animal, and punishment of murderers is upon him. Brown.

PARROT. n. f. [perroquet, French.] A particoloured bird of the species of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice. See

PARROQUET.

Some will evermore peep through their eyes,

And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakspeare.

Who taught the parrot human notes to try?

'Twas witty want, hence hunger to appease. Dryd.

TO PARRY. v. n. [parir, French.] To put by thrusts; to fence.

A man of courage, who cannot fence, and will put all upon one thrust, and not stand parrying, has the odds against a moderate fencer. Locke.

I could

'What cut the air with wings, what swim in floods? Samuel.

Like one that had been led astray
Through the heav'n's wide pathless way. Milton.
In fortune's empire blindly thus we go.
And wander after pathless destiny.

Whole dark solitudes since prudence cannot know,
In vain it would provide. Dryden.

Through mists obscure she wings her tedious way,
Not wanders dazzled with too bright a day;
And from the summit of a pathless coast
See infin'ty, and in that light is lost. Prior.

PATHONOMIC. adj. [παθονομικός, pathon-omic, and νομικός.] Such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease; not symptomatick.

He has the true pathonomic sign of love, jealousy, for no body will suffer his mistress to be treated so. Arbutnot.

PATHOLOGIST. n. f. [παθολόγος and λόγος.] One who treats of pathology.

PATHOLOGY. n. f. [παθολογία and λόγος.]

pathologie, French.] That part of medicine which relates to the distempers, with their differences, causes, and effects, incident to the human body. Quincy.

PATHWAY. n. f. [path and way.] A road; in common acceptation, a narrow way to be pass'd on foot.

Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shak.
In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death. Prov. xii. 28.

When in the middle pathway balks the snake,
O lead me, guard me from the sultry hours. Gay.

PATIBLE. adj. [from patior, Latin.] Sufferable; tolerable. Ditt.

PATIBULARY. adj. [patibulaire, French; from patibulum, Latin.] Belonging to the gallows. Ditt.

PATIENCE. n. f. [patience, French; patientia, Latin.]

1. The power of suffering; calm endurance of pain or labour.

The king becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, forbitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Marbeth.
Christ's fortitude and patience have their opportunity in times of affliction and persecution. Spence.

Frequent debauch to habitude prevails,
Patience of toil and love of virtue fails. Prig.

2. The quality of expecting long without rage or discontent; long-suffering.

Necessary patience in seeking the Lord, is better than he that leadeth his life without a guide. Eccles. ix. 32.

Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Matthew.

3. Perseverance; continuance of labour.

He learnt with patience, and with meekness taught,
His life was but the comment of his thought. Harte.

4. The quality of bearing offences without revenge or anger.

The hermit then assum'd a bolder tone,
His rage was kindled, and his patience gone. Harte.

5. Sufferance; permission.

By their patience be it spoken, the apostles preached as well when they wrote, as when they spake the gospel. Hucker.

6. An herb: A species of dock.

Patience, an herb, makes a good boiled salad. Mortim.

PATIENT. adj. [patient, French; patient, Latin.]

1. Having the quality of enduring: with of before the thing endured.

They open'd camps deform'd by civil light. Prior.

PATIENT. n. f. [patient, French.]

1. That

1. That which receives impressions from external agents.

Malice is a passion so impetuous and precipitate, that it often involves the agent and the patient.

Government of the Tongue.

To proper patients he kind agents brings,
In various leagues binds disfiguring things. Greech.

Action and passion are modes which belong to substances; when a smith with a hammer strikes a piece of iron, the hammer and the smith are both agents or subjects of action; the one supreme, and the other subordinate: the iron is the patient or the subject of passion, in a philosophical sense, because it receives the operation of the agent. Watts.

2. A person diseased. It is commonly used of the relation between the sick and the physician.

You deal with me like a physician, that seeing his patient in a peevish fever, should chide instead of administering help, and bid him be sick no more. Sidney.

Through ignorance of the disease, through unreasonableness of the time, instead of good he worketh hurt, and out of one evil throweth the patient into many miseries. Spenser.

A physician utters various methods for the recovery of sick persons; and though all of them are disagreeable, his patients are never angry. Addison.

3. It is sometimes, but rarely, used absolutely for a sick person.

Not will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies or beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard mattress or the mother ground. Dryd.

It is wonderful to observe, how inapprehensive these patients are of their disease, and backward to believe their case is dangerous. Blackmore.

- To PATIENT. v. a. [patienter, French] To compose one's self; to behave with patience. Obsolete.

Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me. Shak.

- PATIENTLY. adv. [from patient.]

1. Without rage under pain or affliction.

Lament not, Eve, but patiently resign
What justly thou hast lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ned is in the gout,
Lies rack'd with pain, and you without,
How patiently you hear him groan!
How glad the case is not your own! Swift.

2. Without vicious impetuosity; with calm diligence.

That which they grant, we gladly accept at their hands, and wish that patiently they would examine how little cause they have to deny that which as yet they grant not. Hobbes.

Could men but once be persuaded patiently to attend to the dictates of their own minds, religion would gain more proselytes. Calamy's Sermons.

- PATINE. n. f. [patina, Latin.] The cover of a chalice. Ainsworth.

- PARTLY. adv. [from pat.] Commonly; fitly.

- PATRIARCH. n. f. [patriarche, Fr. patriarca, Latin.]

1. One who governs by paternal right; the father and ruler of a family.

So spake the patriarch of mankind; but Eve Persisted, yet submits. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryd.

2. A bishop superior to archbishops.

The patriarchs for an hundred years had been of one house, to the prejudice of the church, and there yet remained one bishop of the same kindred. Raleigh.

Where secular primates were heretofore given,
The ecclesiastical laws have ordered patriarchs and ecclesiastical primates to be placed. Ayliffe's Parerg.

- PATRIARCHAL. adj. [patriarchal, Fr. from patriarch.]

1. Belonging to patriarchs; such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs.

Such drowsy sedentary souls have they,
Who would to patriarchal years live on,
Fix'd to hereditary clay,
And know no climate but their own. Norris.

Nimrod enjoyed this patriarchal power; but he Against right enlarged his empire, by seizing violently on the rights of other lords. Locke.

2. Belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.

Archbishops or metropolitans in France are immediately subject to the pope's jurisdiction; and, in other places, they are immediately subject to the patriarchal sees. Ayliffe.

- PATRIARCHATE. n. f. [patriarchat, French; from patriarch.] A bishoprick superior to archbishopricks.

Between ecclesiastical, the questions are as ancient as the differences between Rome and any other of the old patriarchates. Selden.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices; as that of the pontificate, a patriarchal see, and archbishoprick. Ayliffe.

- PATRIARCHY. n. f. Jurisdiction of a patriarch; patriarchate

Calabria pertained to the patriarch of Constantinople, as appeareth in the novel of Leo Sophus, touching the precedence of metropolitans belonging to that patriarchy. Brewster.

- PATRICIAN. adj. [patricien, French; patricius, Lat.] Senatorial; noble; not plebeian.

His horses' hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addis.

- PATRICIAN. n. f. A nobleman.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
Defend the justice of my cause with arms. Shaksp.
You'll find Gracchus, from patrician grown
A fencer and the scandal of the town. Dryd.
Your daughters are all married to wealthy patricians. Swift.

- PATRIMONIAL. adj. [patrimonial, Fr. from patrimony.] Possessed by inheritance.

The expence of the duke of Ormond's own great patrimonial estate, that came over at that time, is of no small consideration in the stock of this kingdom. Temple.

Their patrimonial sloth the Spaniards keep,
And Philip first taught Philip how to sleep. Dryd.

- PATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from patrimonial.] By inheritance.

Good princes have not only made a distinction between what was their own patrimonially, as the civil law books term it, and what the state had an interest in. Davenant.

- PATRIMONY. n. f. [patrimonium, Lat. patrimoine, French.] An estate possessed by inheritance.

Inclosures they would not forbid, for that had been to forbid the improvement of the patrimony of the kingdom. Bacon.

No might the heir, whose father hath, in play,
Wasted a thousand pounds of ancient rent,
By painful earning of one groat a day,
Hope to restore the patrimony spent. Davies.

In me all
Posterity stands curs'd! for patrimony
That I must leave ye, sons. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For his redemption, all my patrimony
I am ready to forego and quit. Milton's Agonistes.

Their ships like wasted patrimonies shew,
Where the thin scattering trees admit the light,
And shun each other's shadows as they grow. Dryden.

The shepherd last appears,
And with him all his patrimony bears;

His house and household gods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cure. Dryden.

- PATRIOT. n. f.

1. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.

Patrists who for sacred freedom stood. Titch.
The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Shall know he conquer'd. Addis's Cato.

Here to a full flow from a more general cause,
Such tenacious patriots find the dying laws. Payson.

- PATROLE. n. f. [patrouille, French, old French.]

1. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept.

2. Those that go the rounds.

O thou! by whose almighty nod the scale
Of empire rises, or alternate falls,
Send forth the saving virtues round the land
In bright patrol. Thompson's Summer.

- To PATROLE. v. n. [patrouiller, French.]

- To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.

These outguards of the mind are sent abroad,
And still patrolling beat the neighboring road;
Or to the parts remote obedient fly,
Keep posts advanc'd, and on the frontier lie. Blaikmore.

- PATRON. n. f. [patron, French; patronus, Latin]

1. One who countenances, supports, or protects. Commonly a wretch who supports with insolence, and is paid with flattery.

I'll plead for you as for my patron. Shakspere.
Ne'er let me pass in silence Work's name;
Ne'er cease to mention the continu'd debt,
Which the great patron only would forget. Prior.

2. A guardian saint.

Thou amongst those saints, whom thou dost see,
Shalt be a saint, and thine own nation's friend
And patron. Spenser.

St. Michael is mentioned as the patron of the Jews, and is now taken by the Christians, as the protector general of our religion. Dryden.

3. Advocate; defender; vindicator.

We are no patrons of those things; the best defence whereof is speedy redress and amendment. Hobbes.

Whether the minds of men have naturally imprinted on them the ideas of extension and number, I leave to those who are the patrons of innate principles. Locke.

4. One who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.

Far more the patrons than the clerks inflame,
Patrons of lust afraid, but not of vice,
Or swollen with pride, or sunk in avarice. Wesley.

- PATRONAGE. n. f. [from patron.]

1. Support; protection.

Lady, most worthy of all duty, how falls it out, that you, in whom all virtue shines, will take the patronage of virtue, the only rebellious handmaid against virtue? Sidney.

Here's patronage, and here our heart desires,
What breaks its bonds, what draws the closer ties,
Shows what rewards our services may gain,
And how too often we may court in vain. Greene.

2. Guardianship of saints.

From certain passages of the poets, several ships made choice of some god as other for their guardians, as among the Roman Catholics every vessel is recommended to the patronage of some particular saint. Addis. n.

3. Donation of a benefice; right of conferring a benefice.

To PATRONAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To patronise; to protect. A bad word. Darest thou maintain the former words thou speak'st?

—Yes, sir, as well as you dare patronage. The envious barking of your saucy tongue. Shak.

An out-law in a castle keeps,

And uses it to patronage his theft. Shakespeare.

PATRONAL. adj. [from patronus, Latin.]

Protecting; supporting; guarding; defending; doing the office of a patron.

The name of the city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms. Bacon.

PATRONESS. n. f. [feminine of patron; patrona, Latin.]

1. A female that defends, countenances, or supports.

Of close escapes the aged patroness,

Blacker than earth, her sable mantle spread,

When with two trusty maids in great distress,

Both from mine uncle and my realm I fled. Fairf.

All things should be guided by her direction, as the foreign patroness and protectress of the enterprise. Bacon.

Retriending me night, best patroness of grief,

Over the pole thy thickest mantle throw. Milton.

He petitioned his patroness, who gave him for answer, that providence had assigned every bird its proportion. L'Estrange.

It was taken into the protection of my patroness at court. Swift.

2. A female guardian saint.

To PATRONISE. v. a. [from patron] To protect; to support; to defend; to countenance.

Churchmen are to be had in due respect for their work sake, and protected from scorn; but if a clergyman be loose and scandalous, he must not be patronised nor winked at. Bacon.

As tenderness of conscience against good laws, is hypocritically, and patronised by none but men of design, who look upon it as the fittest engine to get into power. Swift.

I have been esteemed and patronised by the grandfather, the father, and the son. Dryden.

PATRONYMICK. n. f. [πατρωνυμικόν, patronymique, Fr.] Name expressing the name of the father or ancestor: as, Tydidæ, the son of Tydeus.

As wander through the forest walks. Thomf.

PATTERN. n. f. [patron, French; patroon, Dutch.]

1. The original proposed to imitation; the archetype; that which is to be copied; an exemplar.

As though your desire were, that the churches of old should be pattens for us to follow, and even glasses wherein we might see the practice of that which by you is gathered out of scripture. Hooker.

I will be the pattern of all patience;

I will say nothing. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A pattern to all princes living with her,

And all that shall succeed. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

The example and pattern of the church of Rome. Clarendon.

Lose not the honour you have early won,

But stand the blameless pattern of a son. Dryden.

Measure the excellency of a virtuous mind, not as it is the copy, but the pattern of regal power. Greene.

Pattens to rule by are to be fought for out of good, not loose reigns. Davenant.

This pattern should be our guide, in our present state of pilgrimage. Atterbury.

Christianity commands us to act after a nobler pattern than the virtues even of the most perfect men. Rogers.

Take pattern by our sister star,

Delude at once and bless our sight;

When you are seen, be seen from far,

And civilly chafe to shine by night. Swift.

2. A specimen; a part shown as a sample of the rest.

A gentleman sends to my shop for a pattern of stuff; if he like it, he compares the pattern with the whole piece, and probably we bargain. Swift.

3. An instance; an example.

What God did command touching Canaan, the same concerneth not us otherwise than only as a fearful pattern of his just displeasure against sinful nations. Hooker.

4. Any thing cut out in paper to direct the cutting of cloth.

To PATTERN. v. a. [patronner, French; from the noun.]

1. To make an imitation of something; to copy.

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, Pattern'd by that the poet in describes. Shakspeare.

2. To serve as an example to be followed. Neither sense is now much in use.

When I that censure him do so offend, Let mine own judgment pattern out my death, And nothing come in partial. Shakspeare.

1. Fewness; smallness of number.

The multitude of parishes, and paucity of schools. Hakl.

In such slender corpuscles as those of colour, may easily be conceived a greater paucity of protuberant corpuscles. Boyle.

Socrates well understood what he said touching the rarity and paucity of friends. L'Estrange.

2. Smallness of quantity.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals, as lizards, frogs, and other fishes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To PAVE. v. a. [pavio, Latin; paver, French.]

1. To lay with brick or stone; to floor with stone.

Should the kneel down,

Her brother's ghost his paved bed would break,

And take her hence in horror. Shakspeare.

Let not the court be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter. Bacon.

From this chymic flame

I see a city of more precious mold, With silver pav'd, and all divine with gold. Dryd.

The streets are paved with brick or freestone. Addison.

2. To make a passage easy.

It might open and pave a prepared way to his own title. Bacon.

PAVEMENT. n. f. [pavimentum, Latin.]

Stones or bricks laid on the ground; stone floor. Floor is used of stone, but pavement never of wood.

The marble pavement closes, he is enter'd

Into his radiant roof. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,

And pavement stars seen in the galaxy. Milton.

The long laborious pavement here he treads,

That to proud Rome th' admiring nations leads. Addison.

The foundation of Roman ways was made of rough stone joined together with cement, upon this was laid another layer, consisting of small stones and cement, to plane the inequalities of the lower stratum in which the stones of the upper pavement

were fixed: for there can be no very durable pavement, but a double one. Arbutnot.

PAVER. n. f. [from pave.] One who

PAVIER. n. f. lays with stones.

For thee the sturdy paver thumps the ground,

Whilst ev'ry stroke his lab'ring lungs rebound. Gay.

PAVILION. n. f. [pavillon, French.] A tent; a temporary or moveable house.

Flowers being under the trees, the trees were to them a pavilion, and the flowers to the trees a musical floor. Dryden.

She did lie

In her pavilion, cloth of gold, of tissue. Shakspeare.

He, only he, heav'n's blew pavilion spreads,

And on the ocean's dancing billows treads. Sandys.

It was usual for the enemy, when there was a king in the field, to demand in what part of the camp he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

The glowing fury springs,

Once more invades the guilty dome, and shrouds its bright pavilions in a veil of clouds. Pope.

To PAVILION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with tents.

Jacob in Mahanaim saw

The field pavilion'd with his guardians bright. Milt.

one who receives alms.

PAUSE. n. f. [pause, French; pausa,

low Latin; pausa.]

1. A stop; a place or time of intermission.

Neither could we ever come to any pause, whereon to rest our assurance this way. Hooker.

Comes a fellow crying out for help,
And Cassio following with determin'd sword,
To execute upon him; this gentleman
Steps in to Cassio, and entreats his pause. Shakspeare.
Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quenched my fire. Denham.

The punishment must always be rigorously exacted, and the blows by pauses laid on till they reach the mind, and you perceive the signs of a true sorrow. Locke.

Whilst those exalted to primeval light,
Only perceive some little pause of joys
In those great moments when their god employs
The r minority. Prior.

What pause from woe, what hopes of comfort bring

The names of wife or great? Prior.
Our discourse is not kept up in conversation, but falls into more pauses and intervals than in our neighbouring countries. Addison.

2. Suspense; doubt.

I like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

5. A stop or intermission in music.

To PAUSE. v. n.

1. To wait; to stop; not to proceed; to forbear for a time, used both of speech and action.

Tarry, pa-se a day or two,
Before you hazard: for in chusing wrong
I lose your company, therefore forbear a while. Shakspeare.

Give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, give in your harmony. Shak.
Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd. Milton.

As one who in his journey baits at noon,
Though bent on speed, so here th' archangel paus'd,
Between a world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milt.

2. To deliberate.

Beat Worcester to death, and Vernon too,
Other offenders we will pause upon. Shakspeare.
Soliman, pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being over, suffered himself to be intimated. Knotes.

3. To be intermitted.

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire,
The pealing organ, and the pausing choir,
And the last words, that dunt to dunt convey'd? Tuckel.

PAUSER. n. s. [from pause.] He who pauses; he who deliberates.

The expedition of my violent love
Outruns the pauser, reason. Shakspeare's Macb.

PAW. n. s. [parven, Welch.]

1. The foot of a beast of prey.

One chose his ground,
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
Grip'd in each paw. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The bear, that tears the prey, and when pursued, lest he become a prey, goes backward into his den that the hunter rather mistakes, than finds the way of his paw. Holyday.

The bee and serpent know their stings, and the bear the use of his paw. More against Atheism.

If lions had been brought up to painting, where you have one lion under the feet of a man, you should have had twenty men under the paw of a lion. L'Estrange.

Each claims possession,
For both their paws are fastened on the prey. Dryd.

2. Hand. In contempt.

Be civil to the wretch imploring,
And lay your paws upon him without roaring. Dryden.

To PAW. v. n. [from the noun.] To draw the fore foot along the ground.

The fiery courser, when he hears from far
The sprightly trumpets and the shouts of war,
Pricks up his ears, and trembling with delight Shifts place, and paws, and hopes the promised fight. Dryden.

The impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seem to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already cross'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost. Pope.
Once, a fiery horse, pawing with his hoofs,
Struck a hole in my handkerchief. Swift.

PAW. v. a.

whose oath will be believed; I'll trounce you. Dryden.

PEACH-COLOURED. adj. [peach and colour.] Of a colour like a peach.

One Mr. Caper comes to jall at the suit of Mr. Threepile the mercer, for some four suits of peach-coloured fatten, which now peaches him a beggar. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

PEACHICK. n. s. [pea and chick.] The chicken of a peacock.

Does the finveling peachick think to make a cuckold of me? Southey.

PEACOCK. n. s. [papa, Saxon; pavo, Latin. Of this word the etymology is not known: perhaps it is peak cock, from the tuft of feathers on its head;
the peak of women being an ancient ornament: if it be not rather a corruption of beaucoq, French, from the more striking lustre of its spangled train.]
A fowl eminent for the beauty of his feathers, and particularly of his tail.

Let hantuck Talbot triumph for a while;
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakespeare.
The birds that are hardiest to be drawn, are the tame birds; as cock, turkey-cock and peacock. Penham.

2. Any thing acuminated.

3. The rising forepart of a head-dress.

TO PEAK. v. n. [pequeno, Spanish, little;
perhaps lean: but I believe this word has some other derivation: we say a withered man has a sharp face; Fal-staff dying, is said to have a nose as sharp as a pen: from this observation, a sickly man is said to peak or grow acuminated, from pique.]

1. To look sickly.

Weary ten nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakespeare.

of artillery from the tower. Hayward.

The breach of faith cannot be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last pearl to call the judgments of God upon men. Bacon's Essays.

Woods of oranges will smell into the sea perhaps twenty miles; but what is that, since a pearl of ornament will do as much, which moveth in a small compass? Bacon.

A pearl shall rouse their sleep;
Then all thy saints assembled, thou shalt judge - Bad men and angels. Milton's Paradise Regained.

I myself,
Vanquish'd with a pearl of words, O weakness!
Gave up my fort of silence to a woman. Milton.
From the Moon's camp the noise grows louder Still;

Pearls of shouts that rend the heavens. Dryden.
Oh! for a pearl of thunder that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven and Cato tremble!

2. It is once used by Shakespeare for a low dull noise, but improperly.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shard-born beetle with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning pearl, there shall be done

A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO PEARL. v. n. [from the noun.] To play solemnly and loud.

Let the psalm organ blow
To the full voice and quire below,
In service high and anthems clear,
As may, with sweetness through mine ear,
Dissolve me into ecstasies,
And bring all heav'n before mine eyes. Milton.
The peaking organ, and the pausing choir;
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd.

TO PEARL. v. a.

1. To assail with noise.

Nor was his ear less pearl'd
With noises loud and ruinous, than when Bellona forms,

With all her batt'ring engines, bent to raise
Some capital city. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To stir with some agitation: as, to pearl the pot, is when it boils to stir the liquor therein with a ladle. Ainsworth.

stone.] A sort of stone.

PEARL. n. s. [perle, French; perla, Spanish; supposed by Salmasius to come from spherula, Latin.]

1. Pearls, though esteemed of the number of gems by our jewellers, are but a dissembler in the creature that produces them: the fish in which pearls are most frequently found is, the East Indian berbes or pearl oyster: others are found to produce pearls; as the common oyster, the muscle, and various other kinds; but the Indian pearls are superior to all: some pearls have been known of the size of a pigeon's egg; as they increase in size, they are less frequent and more valued: the true shape of the pearl is a perfect round; but some of a considerable size are of the shape of a pear, and serve for ear-rings.

Hill.

TO PEEP. v. n. [This word has no etymology, except that of Skinner, who derives it from opheffen, Dutch, to lift up; and of Casaubon, who derives it from brumvæn, a spy; perhaps it may come from pip, pipio, Latin, to cry as young birds: when the chickens first broke the shell and cried, they were said to begin to pip or peep; and the word that expressed the act of crying, was by mistake applied to the act of appearing that was at the same time: this is offered till something better may be found]

1. To make the first appearance.

She her gay painted plumes disordered,
Seeing at last herself from danger rid,
Peeps forth and soon renews her native pride. Spens.
Your youth,

And the true blood which peeps forth fairly through it,
Do plainly give you out an untaught shepherd. Shakespeare.

England and France brought through their amity,
Bred him some prejudice, for from this league,
Peep'd harms that menace'd him. Shakespeare.
I can tell his pride

Peep through each part of him. Shakespeare.
The timorous maiden blossoms on each bough
Peep forth from their first blushes, so that now

A thousand rudely hopes smil'd in each bud,
And flatter'd every greedy eye that stood. Craspaw.
When words not hers, and more than human found,

She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. R. Jonson.

Earth, but not at once, her visage rears,
And peeps upon the seas from upper grounds. Dryd.
Fair as the face of nature did appear,
When flowers first peep'd, and trees did blossoms bear,

And winter had not yet deform'd th' inveterate year. Dryden.

Printing and letters had just peep'd abroad in the world, and the restorer of learning wrote very calmly against one another. Atterbury.

Though but the very white end of the sprout
peep out in the warm part of the couch, break it open, you will find the sprout of a greater largeness. Motrua's Husbandry.

So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,
And the first clouds and mountains from the last;
But those attain'd, we tremble to survey
The growing labours of the lengthen'd day,
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring eyes,
Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise. Pope.

Most souls but peep out once in age,
Dull sullen prisoners in the body's cage. Pope.

2. To look slyly, closely, or curiously; to look through any crevice.

Who is the same, which at my window peeps. Spenser.

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark
To cry hold! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Nature hath fram'd a strange fellow in her time;
Some that will evermore peep through their eyes,
And laugh like parrots at a bag-piper. Shakespeare.

A fool will peep in at the door. Ecl. xxi. 23.
The twinkling leaves through which he play'd,
Dappling the walk with light and shade,
Like lattice-windows give the spy
Room but to peep with half an eye. Cleveland.

All doors are shut, no servant peeps abroad,
Whil' others outward went on quick dispatch. Dryd.
The daring flames peep in, and saw from far
The awful beauties of the sacred quire;
But since it was prophand by civil war,
Heav'n thought it fit to have it purg'd by fire. Dryden.

Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're true to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

TO PEE. v. n. [by contraction from appear.]

1. To come just in sight.
As the sun breaks through the darkest cloud,
So honour peers in the meek habit. Shakespeare.

Yet many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field: Shakespeare's Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life *peer*ing. Shakespeare.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jon.

2. To

From each tree
The feather'd people look down to peer on me. Dryden.
Those remote and vast bodies were formed not merely to be peep'd at through an optick glass. Bentley's Sermons.

O my muse, just distance keep;
Thou art a maid, and must not peer. Prior.

The fox spied him through a peeping-hole, he had found out to the what news. 1st King.

By the peep holes in his crest,
Is it not virtually content,
That there his eyes took distant aim? Prior.

PEER. n. f. [pair, French]

1. Equal; one of the same rank.
His peer, upon this evidence
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakespeare.

Amongst a man's peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity: and therefore it is good a little to keep rate. Ben Jon.

Oh! what is man, great maker of mankind!
That thou to him so great respect dost bear!
That thou adorst him with to bright a mind,
Mak'st him a king, and ey'n an angel's peer. Davies.

2. One equal in excellence or endowments.

All these did wise Ulysses lead, in counsell peer to Jove. Chapman.

In song he never had his peer,
From sweet Cecilia down to chancleer. Dryden.

And gallop o'er the field: Shakespeare's Henry V.
Ev'n through the hollow eyes of death
I spy life *peer*ing. Shakespeare.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jon.

2. To

2. To look narrowly; to peep.

Now for a clodelike hare in foun they peer,
Now belt and cudgel squirrels leap do move,
Now the ambitious lark with mirror clear
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love.
Sidney

Hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansion to the peering day.
Milton

Peering in maps for ports, and piers, and roads,
Add every object that might make me fear
Misfortune to my ventures.
Shakespeare

PEERAGE. n. f. [pairis, French; from peer]

1. The dignity of a peer.

His friendships he to few confin'd;
No fools of rank or mongrel breed,
Who fann would pass for lords indeed;
Where titles give no right or power,
And peerage is a wither'd flower.
Swift

2. The body of peers.

Not only the penal laws are in force against papists, and their number is contemptible, but also the peerage and commons are excluded from parliament.
Dryden

PEERDOM. n. f. [from peer.] Peerage.
Ainsworth

PEERLESS. n. f. [female of peer.] The lady of a peer; a woman ennobled.

Stateman and patriot ply alike the stocks;
Peerless and butler share alike the box.
Pope

PEERLESS. adj. [from peer.] Unequalled; having no peer.

I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat,
We stand up peerless.
Shakespeare

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none, but for a king.
Shakespeare

Hesperus, that led
The starry host, rode brightest; till the moon,
Rising in cloudy majesty, at length,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light.
Milton

Such music worthiest were to praise
The peerless light of her immortal praise,
Whose lustre leads us.
Milton

Her dress, her shape, her marchless grace,
Were all objects d, as well as heav'nly face;
With such a peerless majesty she stands,
As in that day she took the crown.
Dryden

PEERLESSNESS. n. f. [from peerless.]

Universal superiority.

PEERLESS. adj. [This word Junius, with more reason, he commonly discovers, supposes to be formed ruption from perverse; Skinner rather derives it from berish, as we say waspy.
ish.]

1. Petulant; waspish; easily offended; irritable; irascible; soon angry; perverse; morose; querulous; full of expressions of discontent; hard to please.

She is peerish, sullen, forward,
Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty.
Shak.

It thou hast the metal of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this peerish town,
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these lousy walls.
Shakespeare

Neither will it be satire or peerish invective to affirm, that infidelity and vice are not much diminished.
Swift

2. Expressing discontent, or fretfulness.

For what can breed more peerish incongruities,
Than man to yield to female lamentations?
Sidney

I will not presume
To send such peerish tokens to a king.
Shakespeare

Those deserve to be doubly laughed at, that are peerish and angry for nothing to no purpose.
L'Estrange

PEEVISHLY. adv. [from peerish.] Angrily; querulously; morosely.

He was so peerishly opinionative and proud, that he would neither ask nor hear the advice of any.

PEEVISHNESS. n. f. [from peerish.] Irascibility; querulousness; fretfulness;
perverseness.

Some miscarriages in government might escape through the peerishness of others; envying the publick should be managed without them. K. Charles

It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peerishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it. Locke

You may find
Nothing but acid left behind:
From passion you may then be freed,
When peerishness and spleen succeed.
Swift

PEG. n. f. [pegge, Teutonic.]

1. A piece of wood driven into a hole, which does the office of an iron nail.

Solid bodies forthwew rain; as boxes and pgs of wood, when they draw and wind hard. Bacon

The teeth are about thirty in each jaw; all of them caryculares or peg teeth, not much unlike the tusks of a mastiff. Grew

If he be choleric, we shall treat him like his little friend, and hang him upon a peg till he comes to himself. Ainsworth

The pegs and nails in a great building, though they are but little valued in themselves, are absolutely necessary to keep the whole frame together.
Atkyns's Spectator

A finer petticoat can neither make you richer, more virtuous, or wise, than if it hung upon a peg. Swift

2. The pins of an instrument in which the strings are strained.

You are well tun'd now, but I'll let down
The pegs that make this music. Shakespeare

3. To take a PEG lover. To deprecate; to sink; perhaps from relaxing the cords of musical instruments.

Remember how in arms and politics,
We shall have worried all your holy tricks,
Tieparr'd your party with intrigue,
And took your grandees down a peg. Hudibras

4. The nick-name of Margaret.

To PEG. v. a. To fasten with a peg.
I will rend an oak,
And peg thee in his knotty entail, till
I houl't howl'd away twelve winters. Shakespeare

Taking the shoots of the past springs, and peg- ging them down in very rich earth, by that time twelvemonth they will be ready to remove. Frederick

PELF. n. f. [In low Lat. peltra, not known whence derived; penne, in Norman, is the thought of this. all worldly pelf.]

Hardy cit,
Thou dost view my direct countenance;
I read thee rash and headless of thyself,
To trouble my full seat and heaps of precious pelf.
Spenser

Of traffick or return she never taketh care;
Not provident of pelf, as many islands are. Drayton

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf,
I pray for no man but myself. Shakespeare

He call'd his money in
But the prevailing love of pelf
Soon split him on the former shelf:
He put it out again. Dryden's Horace

To the poor if he refus'd his pelf,
He us'd them full as kindly as himself. Swift

PELICAN. n. f. [pelicanus, low Latin;
pelican, French.]

There are two sorts of pelicans; one lives upon the water and feeds upon fish; the other keeps in deserts, and feeds upon serpents and other reptiles:

the pelican has a peculiar tenderness for its young;
it generally places its nest upon a craggy rock: the pelican is supposed to admit its young to suck blood from its breast. Gaimet

Should discarded fathers
Have this little mercy on their flesh;
'Twas this flesh begot those pelican daughters. Shak.

The pelican hath a beak broad and flat, like the slice of apothecaries. Hakewill or Providence

PELLET. n. f. [from pila, Latin; pelote, French.]

1. A little ball.

A cube or pellet of yellow wax as much as half the spirit of wine, burnt only eight, seven pulses,
Bacon

That which is sold to the merchants is made into little pellets, and sealed. Sanays

I dressed with little pellets of lint. Wijman

2. A bullet; a ball to be shot.

The force of gunpowder hath been ascribed to rarefaction of the earthy substance into flame, and to follow with a dilatation: and therefore, lest two bodies should be in one place, there must needs also follow an expulsion of the pellet or blowing up of the mine: but these are ignorant speculations;
for flame, if there were nothing else, will be suffu-cated with any hard body, such as a pellet is, or the barrel of a gun; so as the hard body would kill the flame. Bacon

How shall they reach us in the air with those pellets they can hardly roll upon the ground?
L'Estrange

In a shooting trunk, the longer it is to a certain limit, the more torribly the air pushes and drives the pellet. Ray

PELLETED. adj. [from pellet.] Consisting of bullets.

My brave Egyptians all,

Clerk of the pell, an officer belonging to the exchequer, who enters every teller's bill into a parchment roll called pellis acceptum, the roll of receipts; and also makes another roll called pellis
extantum, a roll of the disbursements. Bale

PELLUCID. adj. [pellucidus, Latin.] Clear; transparent; not opaque; not dark.

The colours are owing to the intermixture of foreign matter with the proper matter of the stone;
this is the case of agates and other coloured stones,
the colours of several wherof may be extracted, and the bodies rendered as pellucid as crystal, without sensibly damaging the texture. Woodward

If water be made warm in any pellucid vessel emptied of air, the water in the vacuum will bubble and boil as vehemently as it would in the open air in a vessel set upon the fire, till it conceives a much greater heat. Newton's Optics

P p 2 PELLO

penetrails to insinuate some time must be allowed. Hawkey.

PENETRANCY. n. f. [from penetrant.]
Power of entering or piercing.

The subtilty, activity and penetrancy of its efflu-via no obstacle can stop or repel, but they will make their way through all bodies. Ray.

PENETRANT. adj. [penetrant, Fr.]
Having the power to pierce or enter;
sharp; subtle.

If the operation of these salts be in convenient glasses promoted by warmth, the ascending steams may easily be caught and reduced into a penetrant spirit. Boyle.

The food, mingled with some dissolvent juices, is evacuated into the intestines, where it is further subtilized and rendered so fluid and penetrant, that the finer part finds its way in at the straight in-fices of the lacteous veins. Ray.

TO PENETRATE. v. a. [penetro, Lat.
penetrer, French.]

1. To pierce; to enter beyond the surface; to make way into a body.

Marrow is, of all other oily substances, the most penetrating. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To affect the mind.

There shall we clearly see the uses of these things, which here were too subtle for us to pene- trate. Ray.

TO PENITRATE. v. n.

1. To make way.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate,
Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate:
Though the same sun with all diffusive rays
Smile in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

2. To make way by the mind.

If we reached no farther than metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the infide and reality of the thing. Locke.

PENETRATION. n. f. [penetration, Fr.
from penetrare.]

1. The act of entering into any body.

It warms
The universe, and to each inward part
With gentle penetration, though unseen, Shoots invisible virtue even to the deep. Milton.

2. Mental entrance into any thing abstruse.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, is not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

3. Acuteness; sagacity.

The proudest admirer of his own parts might consult with others, though of inferior capacity and penetration. Watts.

PENETRATIVE. adj. [from penetrare.]

1. Piercing; sharp; subtle.

Let not air be too gross, nor too penetrative, nor subject to any foggy noisomeness from fells. Wotton.

2. Acute; sagacious; discerning.

O thou, whose penetrative wisdom found
The south sea rocks and shelves, where thousand drown'd. Swift's Miscellany.

3. Having the power to impress the mind.

Thy master thus with pleicht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdu'd To penetrative shame? Shakespeare.

PENITRATIVENESS. n. f. [from pene- trative.] The quality of being pene- trative.

PENGUIN. n. f. [anser magellanicus, Lat.]

1. A bird. This bird was found with this name, as is supposed, by the first discoverers of America; and penguin signifying in Welsh a white head, and the head of this fowl being white, it has been imagined that America was peopled from Wales; whence Hudibras:
Bilish Indians nam'd from penguins.

Grew gives another account of the name, deriving it from pinguis, Latin,
fat; but is, I believe, mistaken.

The penguin is so called from his extraordinary fatness: for though he be no higher than a large goose, yet he weighs sometimes sixteen pounds; his wings are extreme short and little, altogether unsuited for flight, but by the help whereof he swims very swiftly. Grew's Musaeum.

2. A fruit.

The penguin is very common in the West Indies, where the juice of its fruit is often put into punch, being of a sharp acid flavour: there is also a wine made of the juice of this fruit, but it will not keep good long. Muller.

PENINSULA. n. f. [Latin, penes insula;
peninsule, Fr.] A piece of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined by a narrow neck to the main.

Afide of Milbrook lieth the peninsula of Inswick, on whose neckland standeth an ancient house. Canter.

Almost surrounded by water.

PENITENCE. n. f. [penitence, French;
penitentia, Latin.] Repentance; sorrow for crimes; contrition for sin, with amendment of life or change of the affections.

Death is desert'd, and penitence has room
To mitigate, if not reverse the doom. Dryden.

PENITENT. adj. [penitent, French;
penitens, Latin.] Repentant; contrite for sin; sorrowful for past transgressions, and resolutely amending life.

Much it joys me
To see you become so penitent. Shakespeare.

Not in the land of their captivity
Humbled themselves, or penitent besought
The God of their forefathers. Milton.

Provoking God to raise them enemies;
From whom as oft he saves their penitent. Milton.

The proud he tan'd, the penitent he cheer'd,
Nor to rebuke the rich offender fear'd;
His preaching much, but more his practice wrought,
A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.

PENITENT. n. f.

1. One sorrowful for sin.
Concealed treasures shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose care shall the impartial laws shall dedicate to the worms of the earth. Buchan.

The repentance which is formed by a grateful sense of the divine goodness towards him, is resolved on while all the appetites are in their strength:
the penitent conquers the temptations of sin in their full force. Rogers.

2. One under censures of the church, but admitted to penance.

The.

The counterfeit Dionysius describes the practice of the church, that the catechumens and penitents were admitted to the lessons and psalms, and then excluded. Strlingfleet.

3. One under the direction of a confessor.

PENITENTIAL. adj. [from penitence.] Expressing penitence; enjoined as penance.

I have done penance for contemning love, whose high unpeevish thoughts have punished me with bitter falls and penitential groans. Shakespeare.

Is it not strange, that a rational man should adore looks and gait, and shed penitential tears at the smell of a decayed onion? South.

PENITENTIAL. n. f. [penitenciel, Fr. penitenciale, low Latin.] A book directing the degrees of penance.

The penitentials or book of penance contained such matters as related to the imposing of penance, and the reconciliation of the person that suffered penance. Aylmer.

PENITENTIARY. n. f. [penitencier, Fr. penitenciarium, low Latin.]

1. One who prescribes the rules and measures of penance.

Upon the loss of Urbin, the duke's undoubted right, no penitentiary, though he had enjoined him never to straight penance to expiate his first offence, would have counselled him to have given over pursuit of his right, which he prosperously re-obtained. Bacon.

The great penitentiary with his counsellors prescribes the measure of penance. Aylmer's Pauceron.

2. A penitent; one who does penance.

PEPPER n. f. [piper, Latin; poivre, Fr.]

We have three kinds of pepper; the black, the white, and the long, which are three different fruits produced by three distinct plants: black pepper is a dried fruit of the size of a vetch and round-ish, but rather of a deep brown than a black colour; with this we are supplied from Java, Maabar, and Sumatra, and the plant has the same heat and fiery taste that we find in the pepper.
White pepper is commonly facitious, and prepared from the black by taking off the outer bark; but there is a third sort, which is a perfume fruit naturally white: long pepper is a fruit gathered while unripe and dried, of an inch or an inch and half in length, and of the thickness of a large goose quill. Hist.

to make them open, airy, and well perflated.

PERFLATION. n. s. [from perfla.] The act of blowing through.

Mineers, by perflations with large bellows, give motion to the air, which ventilates and cools the mines.

TO PERFORATE. v. a. [perfora, Lat.]
To pierce with a tool; to bore.

Draw the bough of a low fruit tree newly budded without twitting, into an earthen pot perforate at the bottom, and then cover the pot with earth, it will yield a very large fruit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
A perforated bladder does not swell. Boyle.

The labour'd chyle pervades the pores,
In all the arterial perforated throes. Blackmore.

The aperture was limited by an opaque circle placed between the eye glass and the eye, and perforated in the middle with a little round hole for the rays to pass through to the eye. Newton.
Worms perforate the guts. Arbutnot.

PERFORATION. n. s. [from perforate.]
1. The act of piercing or boring.

The likeliest way is the perforation of the body of the tree in several places one above another, and the filling of the holes. Baill.

The industrious perforation of the tendons, of the second joints of fingers and toes, and the drawing the tendons of the third joints through them.

2. Hole; place bored.

That the nipples should be made spongy, and with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk, are arguments of providence. Ray on Creation.

PERFORATOR. n. s. [from perforate.]
The instrument of boring.

The patient placed in a convenient chair, dipping the trocar in oil, stab it suddenly through the teguments, and withdrawing the perforator, leave the waters to empty by the canula. Skimp.

PERFORCE. adv. [per and force.] By violence; violently.

Guyon to him leaping, said
His hand, that trembled as one truly'd,
And though himself were at the light dismay'd,
Yet him perforce restrain'd. Spenser.

Jealous Oberon would have the child,
But the perforce withholds the loved boy. Shakspeare.

She amaz'd, her cheeks
All trembling and ailing, full of spots,
And pale with death at hand, perforce the breaks
Into the inmost rooms. Pemberton on Poetry.

TO PERFORM. v. a. [performare, Ital.]

To execute; to do; to discharge; to attchive an undertaking; to accomplish.

All three set among the foremost ranks of fame for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt. Swamy.

Hast thou, spirit,
Perform'd to point the tempest that I had thee?
Shakspeare.

What cannot you and I perform upon Th' unguarded Duncan? Shakspeare's Macbeth.
I will cry unto God that performeth all things for me. Psalms.

Let all things be performed after the law of God diligently. 1 Ekdas, viii. 21.

Thou, my love,
Perform his fun'ral with paternal care. Dryden.
You perform her office in the sphere,
Beast of her blood, and make a new Platonick year. Dryden.

He effectually performed his part, with great integrity, learning, and acuteness; with the exact-ness of a scholar, and the judgment of a complete divine. Waterland.

TO PERFORM. v. n. To succeed in an attempt.

When a poet has performed admirably in several illustrious places, we sometimes also admire his very errors. Watts.

PERFORMABLE. adj. [from perform.]
Practicable; such as may be done.

Men forget the relations of history, affirming that elephants have no joints, whereas their actions are not performable without them. Brown.

PERFORMANCE. n. s. [from perform.]

1. Completion of something designed; execution of something promised.

His promises were, as he then was, mighty;
But his performance, as he now is, nothing. Shak.
Promising is the very air of the thing, it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act, and but in the plainer kind of people, the deed is quite out of use. Shakspeare.

Perform the doing of it, that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance.

The only means to make him successful in the performance of these great works, was to be above contempt. South.

Men may, and must differ in their employments, but yet they may all act for the same end, as dutiful servants of God, in the right and pious performance of their several callings. Lath.

2. Composition; work.

In the good poem of other men, I can only bestee, that 'tis the hand of a good master, but in your performance 'tis scarcely possible, for me to be deceived. Dryden.

Few of our comic performances give good examples.

3. Action; something done.

In this starchy agitation, besides her wilking and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shakspeare.

PERFORMER. n. s. [from perform.]

1. One that performs any thing.

The merit of services is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. Shakspeare.

2. It is generally applied to one that makes a publick exhibition of his skill.

TO PERFRICATE. v. n. [perfrico, Lat.]
To rub over.

PERFRICATION. adj. [from perfrico.]
That which perfumes.

PERFUME. n. s. [parfume, French.]

1. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things.

Pomanders and knots of powders for drying rheums are not so strong as perfumes; you may have them continually in your hand, whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon.

Perfumes, though gross bodies that may be sensibly wafted, yet fill the air, so that we can put our nose in no part of the room where a perfume is burned, but we smell it. Digby.

2. Sweet odour; fragrance.

Even the rough ticks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds had cut a rich perfume.

No rich perfumes refresh the fruitful field,
Nor fragrant herbs their native incense yield. Pope.
Pinks and roses bloom,
And every bramble sheds perfume. Gay.

TO PERFUME. v. a. [from the noun.]

To scent; to impregnate with sweet scent.

Your papers

Let me have them very well perfum'd,
For this is sweeter than perfume itself
To whom they go. Shakspeare's King of the Shires.

Why rather, deep, list thou in smoky cribs,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber,
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shak.

Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd.

The distilled water of wild poppy, mingled at half with rose water, take with some mixture of a few cloves in a perfuming pan. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Smells adhere to hard bodies; as in perfuming
of gloves, which sheweth them corporeal. Bacon.
The pains she takes are vainly meant
To hide her amorous heart,

'Tis like perfuming an ill scent,
The smell's too strong for art. Granville.

See spicy clouds from lowly Sharon rise,
And Carmel's flow'ry top perfumes the skies! Pope.

PERFUMER. n. s. [from perfume.] One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

A moss the perfumers have out of apple trees, that hath an excellent scent. Bacon's Natural Hist.
Fill issued from perfumers shops
A cloud of saffronable tops. Swift.

PERFUMCTORILY. adv. [perfumtorid, Latin.] Carelessly; negligently; in such a manner as to satisfy external form.

For unjustly tasting his eye perfumtoridly upon it, and believing it had been drawn by mature advice, no longer received it, than he delivered it to the lord he oper. Clarendon.

For seriously to heert the clearness and evidence of these proofs, and not perfumtoridly pass over all the passages of the gospel, which are written on purpose that we may believe, without weighing them. Lucas.

Whereas all legick is reducible to the four principal operations of the mind, the two first of these have been handled by Aristotle very perfumtoridly;
of the fourth he has said nothing at all. Baker.

PERFUMCTORY. adj. [perfumtorid, Lat.]
Slight; careless, negligent.

A transient and perfumtorid examination of things lead men into considerable mistakes, which a more correct and rigorous scrutiny would have detected. Woodward.

TO PERFUSE. v. a. [perfusus, Latin.]
To tincture; to overspread.

Thou dregs immediately perfuse the blood with melancholy, and cause obstructions. Haller.

PERFUSION. adv. [per and hups.] Peradventure; it may be.

Perhaps the good old man that kiss'd his son,
And left a blessing on his head,
His arms about him spread,
Hopes yet to see him ere his glass be run. Flatman.
Some what excellent may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place. Dryden.

His thoughts inspir'd his tongue,
And all his soul receiv'd a real love;
Perhaps new graces darted from her eyes,
Perhaps soft pity charm'd his yielding soul,
Perhaps her love, perhaps her kingdom charm'd him. Smith.

It is not his intent to live in such ways as, for ought we know, God may perhaps pardon, but to be diligent in such ways, as we know that God will infallibly reward. Law.

PERIAPT. n. f. [περίαπτος.] Amulet; charm worn as preservative against disease or mischief. Hanmer.

The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen fly;
Now help, ye charming spells and periapts. Shak.
PERICARDIUM. n. f. [μερί and καρδιά;
pericarde, French.]

The pericardium is a thin membrane of a conick figure, that resembles a purse, and contains the heart in its cavity: its basis is pierced in five places, for the passage of the vessels which enter and come out of the heart: the use of the peri- cardium is to contain a small quantity of clear water, which is separated by small glands in it, that the surface of the heart may not grow dry
by its continual motion. Quincy.

PERICARPIMUM. n. f. [περί and καρπίδι;
pericarpe, Fr.] In botany, a pellicle or thin membrane encompassing the fruit or grain of a plant, or that part of a fruit that envelopes the seed.

Besides this use of the pulp or pericarpium for the guard of the seed, it serves also for the sustenance of animals. Roy.

PERICLITATION. n. f. [from periclitor, Latin; periclitur, French.]

1. The state of being in danger.
2. Trial; experiment.

PERICRANIUM. n. f. [from μερί and cranium; pericrane, French.]

The pericranium is the membrane that covers the skull: it is a very thin and nervous membrane of an exquisite sense, such as covers immediately not only the cranium, but all the bones of the body, except the teeth; for which reason it is also called the periosteum. Quincy.

Having divided the pericranium, I saw a fissure running the whole length of the wound. Wijman.

PERICULOUS. adj. [periculōsus, Latin.] Dangerous; jeopardous; hazardous. A word not in use.

As the moon every seventh day arriveth unto a contrary sign, so Saturn, which remaineth about as many years in one sign, and holdeth the same consideration in years as the moon in days, doth cause these periculous periods. Brown.

PERIERGY. n. f. [περί and ἔργον.] Needless caution in an operation; unnecessary diligence.

PERIGEE. } n. f. [μερί and γῆ; perigée, PERIGEUM. } } Is a point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth. Harris.

By the proportion of its motion, it was at the station, at the beginning of Aries, and the peri- geum nearest point in Libra. Brown.

PERIHELION. n. f. [μερί and ἥλιος;
perihelios, Fr.] Is that point of a planet's orbit wherein it is nearest the sun.

Harris.

Sir Isaac Newton has made it probable, that the comet, which appeared in 1680, by approaching to the sun in its perihelium, acquired such a degree of heat, as to be 50000 years a cooling.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

PERIL. n. f. [peril, French; perikel, Dutch; periculum, Latin.]

1. Danger; hazard; jeopardy.

Dear Pirocles, be liberal unto me of those things, which have made you indeed precious to the world, and now doubt not to tell of your perils.
Sidney.

How many perils do unfold

The righteous man to make him daily fall? Spens.
In the act what perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd. Daniel.

The love and pious duty which you pay,
Have paid the perils of so hard a way. Dryden.
Strong, healthy and young people are more in peril by pestilential fevers, than the weak and old.
Arbutnot.

2. Denunciation; danger denounced.

I told her,
On your displeasure's peril,
She should not visit you. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

PERILOUS. adj. [perileux, French; from peril]

1. Dangerous; hazardous; full of danger.

Alterations in the service of God, for that they impair the credit of religion, are therefore perilous in common-weals, which have no continuance longer than religion hath all reverence done unto it.
Hooker.

Her guard is chastity;

She that has that is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills and sandy perilous wilds. Milton.

Dictate propitious to my dutious ear,
What arts can captivate the changeful fear:
For perilous th' assay, unheard th' toil
To elude the preference of a God by guile. Pope.

2. It is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad.

Thus was th' accomplish'd squire endu'd
With gifts and knowledge perilous shrewd. Hudibr.

3. Smart; witty. In this sense it is, I think, only applied to children, and probably obtained its signification from the notion that children eminent for wit do not live; a witty boy was therefore a perilous boy, or a boy in danger.
It is vulgarly parlous.

'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shaksp.

PERILOUSLY. adv. [from perilous.] Dangerously.

PERILOUSNESS. n. f. [from perilous.]
Dangerousness.

PERIMETER. n. f. [μερί and μέτρον;
perimetre, Fr.] The compass or sum of all the sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

By compressing the glasses still more, the diameter of this ring would increase, and the breadth of its orbit or perimeter decrease, until another new colour emerged in the centre of the last.
Newton.

PERIOD. n. f. [periode, French; peri- odos.]

1. A circuit.
2. Time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner.

Tell those, that the sun is fixed in the centre, that the earth with all the planets roll round the sun in their several periods, they cannot admit a syllable of this new doctrine. Watts.

3. A stated number of years; a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning.

A cycle or period is an account of years that has a beginning and end, and begins again as often as it ends. Holder.

We stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period, and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Holder on Time.

4. The end or conclusion.

If my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play. Shak.

There is nothing so secret that shall not be brought to light within the compass of our world; whatsoever concerns this sublunary world in the whole extent of its duration, from the chaos to the last period. Burnet's Theory.

What anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods!
Oh! 'tis a dreadful interval of time. Addison.

5. The state at which any thing terminates.

Beauty's empires, like to greater states,
Have certain periods set, and hidden fates. Suc.
Light-conserving stones must be set in the sun before they retain light, and the light will appear greater or lesser, until they come to their utmost period. Digby.

6. Length of duration.

Some experiment would be made how by art to make plants more lasting than their ordinary period;
as to make a stalk of wheat last a whole year.
Bacon's Natural History.

7. A complete sentence from one full stop to another.

Periods are beautiful, when they are not too long. For so they have their strength too as in a pike or javelin. Ben Jonson.

Is this th' confidence you gave me?
I am on it safely, not a period shall be unsaid for me. Milton.

Syllogism is made use of to discover a fallacy, cunningly wrap up in a smooth period. Locke.

For the assistance of memories, the first words of every period in every page may be written in distinct colours. Watts.

8. A course of events, or series of things memorably terminated; as, the periods of an empire.

From the tongue
The unfinished period falls. Thomson's Spring.

TO PERIOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To put an end to. A bad word.

Your letter he desires
To those have shut him up, which failing to him, Periods his comfort. Shaksp. Lear.

PERIODICAL. } adj. [periodique, French;
PERIODICK. } from period.]

1. Circular; making a circuit; making a revolution.

Was the earth's periodick motion always in the same plane with that of the diurnal, we should miss of those kindly increases of day and night.
Deham.

Four moons perpetually roll round the planet
Jupiter, and are carried along with him in his pe- riodical circuit round the sun. Watts on the Mind.

2. Happening by revolution at some stated time.

Astrological undertakers would raise men out of some stony soil, impregnated with the influence of the stars upon some remarkable and periodical conjunctions. Bentley.

3. Regular; performing some action at stated times.

The confusion of mountains and hollows furnished

ished me with a probable reason for those periodical fountains in Switzerland, which flow only at such particular hours of the day. Arbutnot.

4. Relating to periods or revolutions.

It is implicitly denied by Aristotle in his politics, in that discourse against Plato, who measured the vicissitude and mutation of states by a periodical fatality of number. Brown.

PERIODICALLY. adv. [from periodical.] At stated periods.

The three tides ought to be understood of the space of the night and day, then there will be a regular flux and reflux thrice in that time every eight hours periodically. Brown.

PERIOSTEUM. n. s. [περίστω and ὄστω; perioste, French.]

All the bones are covered with a very sensible membrane, called the periosteum. Cbryn.

PERIPHERY. n. s. [περί and φίω; peripherie, French.] Circumference.

Neither is this sole vital faculty sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery or outward parts. Harvey.

TO PERIPHRASE. v. a. [periphrase, French.] To express one word by many; to express by circumlocution.

PERIPHRAISIS. n. s. [περιφρασις; periphrasis, French.] Circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one: as, for death, we may say, the loss of life.

She contains all bliss, And makes the world but her periphrasis. Cleau.

They make the gates of Thebes and the mouths of this river a constant periphrasis for this number seven. Brown.

They shew their learning uselessly, and make a long periphrasis on every word of the book they explain. Watts.

The periphrasis and circumlocutions, by which Homer expresses the single act of dying, have supplied succeeding poets with all their manners of phrasing it. Pope.

PERIPHRASTICAL. adj. [from periphrasis.] Circumlocutory; expressing the sense of one word in many.

PERIPNEUMONY. n. s. [περί and πνέω; peripneumonia, French.] An inflammation of the lungs.

Lungs oft imbibing phlegmatick and melancholic humours, are now and then deprehended tedious, by dissipation of the subtiler parts, and lapidification of the grosser that may be left indurated, through the gross reliques of peripneumonia or inflammation of the lungs. Harvey.

A peripneumony is the last fatal symptom of every disease, for no body dies without a stagnation of the blood in the lungs, which is the total extinction of breath. Arbutnot.

TO PERISH. v. n. [perir, French; pereo, Latin.]

1. To die; to be destroyed; to be lost; to come to nothing. It seems to have for or wish before a cause, and by before an instrument. Locke has by before the cause.

I burn, I pine, I perish,
If I atchieve not this young modest girl. Shaksf.
If I have tern any perish for want of clothing, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade. Joh. xxxi. 20.

He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword. Joh. xxxiii. 18.
They perish quickly from off the good land. Deut. xi. 18.

Perish with hunger. Luke. xv. 17.
The sick, when their case comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth to perish without assistance or pity. Locke.

Characters drawn on dust, that the first breath of wind effaces, are altogether as useful as the thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking. Locke.

Exposing their children, and leaving them in the fields to perish by want, has been the practice. Locke.

Still when the lust of tyrant pow'r succeeds,
Some Athens perishes, or some Tully bleeds. Pope.
In the Iliad, the anger of Achilles had caused the death of so many Grecians; and in the Odyssey, the subjects perished through their own fault. Pope.

2. To be in a perpetual state of decay.

Duration, and time which is a part of it, is the idea we have of perishing distance, of which no two parts exist together, but follow in succession, as expansion is the idea of lasting distance, all whose parts exist together. Locke.

3. To be lost eternally.

These, as natural brute beasts made to be destroyed, speak evil of the things they understand not, and shall utterly perish. 2 Pet.

O suffer me not to perish in my sins: Lord carest thou not that I perish, who wilt that all should be saved, and that none should perish? Morison.

TO PERISH. v. a. To destroy; to decay. Not in use.

The splitting rocks cow'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides;
Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
Might in thy palace perish Margaret. Shakspeare.
Rise, prepar'd in black, to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

He was so reserved, that he would impart his secrets to nobody; whereupon this closeness did a little perish his understandings. Collier.

Familiar now with grief your ears refrain,
And in the public weep forget your own,
You weep not for a perish'd lord alone. Pope.

PERISHABLE. adj. [from perish.] Liable to perish; subject to decay; of short duration.

We derogate from his eternal power to ascribe to them the lame dominion over our immortal soul which they have over all bodily substances and perishable natures. Rah. g.

To these purposes nothing can so much contribute as metals of undoubted authority not perishable by time, nor confined to any certain place. Addison.

It is princes greatest present feculty to reign in their subjects hearts, but there are too perishable to preserve their memories, which can only be done by the pens of faithful historians. Swift.
Human nature could not sustain the reflection of having all its scheme and expectations to determine with this frail and perishable composition of flesh and blood. Rigby.

Thrice has he seen the perishable kind
Of men decay. Pope's Odyssey.

PERISHABLENESS. n. s. [from perishable.] Liableness to be destroyed; liableness to decay.

Suppose an island separate from all commerce but having nothing because of its commonness, and perishableness fit to supply the place of money, what reason could any have to enlarge possession beyond the use of his family? Locke.

PERISTALTICK. adj. [περιστάλτις; peristaltic, French.]

Peristaltick motion is that vermicular motion of the guts, which is made by the contraction of the spiral fibres, whereby the excrements are pressed downwards and voided. Quincy.

The peristaltick motion of the guts, and the continual expression of the fluids, will not suffice the least matter to be applied to one point the least instant. Arbutnot.

PERISTE'RION. n. s. The herb vervain.

PERISTYLE. n. s. [peristyle, French.]

A circular range of pillars.

The Villa Gordiana had a peristyle of two hundred pillars. Arbutnot on Coins.

PERISTOSTOLE. n. s. [περί and στολή.]

The pause or interval betwixt the two motions of the heart or pulse; namely, that of the systole or contraction of the heart, and that of diastole or dilatation. Diæ.

PERITONE'UM. n. s. [περιτόνιον; peritoneine, French.] This lies immediately under the muscles of the lower belly, and is a thin and soft membrane, which encloses all the bowels contained in the lower belly, covering all the inside of its cavity. Diæ.

Wounds penetrating into the belly, are such as reach no farther inward than to the peritoneum. Wifeman.

PERJURE. n. s. [perjurus, Latin.] A perjured or forsworn person. A word not in use.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjure, thou simulator of virtue,
Thou art incestuous. Shakspeare's King Lear.

TO PERJURE. v. a. [perjuro, Latin.] To forswear; to taint with perjury. It is used with the reciprocal pronoun: as, be perjured himself.

Who should be trusted now, when the right hand is perjur'd to the bosom? Shakspeare.

The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for perjured persons. 1 Timothy, i. 10.

PERJURER. n. s. [from perjure.] One that swears falsely.

The common oath of the Scythians was by the sword and fire; for that they accounted those two special divine powers, which should work vengeance on the perjurers. Spenser.

PERJURY. n. s. [perjurium, Lat.] False oath.

My great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Cried aloud—What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?
And to be vanish'd. Shakspeare's Richard III.

PERIWIG. n. s. [perruque, French.] Adornitious hair; hair not natural, worn by way of ornament or concealment of baldness.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
It that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd perwig. Shakspeare.

It offends me to hear a robustous perrwig-pated fellow rear a passion to tatters, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakspeare.

The sun's Dishevel'd beams and scatter'd fires
Serve but for ladies perrwigs and tresses
In lovers sonnets. Donne.

Madam Time, be ever bald,
I'll not thy perrwig be call'd. Chaveland.

For vailing of their visages his highness and the marquis bought each a perrwig, somewhat to overshadow their foreheads. Wotton.

They used false hair or perrwig. Arbutnot.
From her own head Megara takes A perrwig of twisted snakes. Swift.

TO PERIWIG. v. a. [from the noun.]

To dress in false hair.

Now when the winter's keener breath began
To crystallize the Baltick ocean,
To glaze the lakes, to bridle up the floods,
And perrwig with snow the bald-pate woods. Sylvestre.

Near the door an entrance gapes,
Crowded round with antic shapes,
Discord perrwig'd with snakes,
See the dreadful strides she takes. Swift's Miscell.

PERIWINKLE. n. s.

1. A small shell fish; a kind of fish snail

To PERK. v. n. [from perch.] Skinner
To hold up the head with an affected briskness.

It, after all, you think it a disgrace,
That Edward's mists thus perks it in your face;
To see a piece of fading flesh and blood,
In all the rest so impudently good;
Fie! let the modest matrons of the town
Come here in crowds, and stare the flumpster down. Pope.

To PERK. v. a. To dress; to prank.

'Tis better to be lowly boyn,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare Henry VIII.

PERK. adj. Peit; brisk; airy. Obsolete.

My ragged ronts
Wont in the wind, and wag their wiggle tails,
Perk as a peacock, but nought avail. Spenser.

PERMANENCE. } n. s. [from permanent.] PERMANENCY. }

1. Duration; consistency; continuance in the same state; lastingness.

Salts, they say, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended together, but would remain uncompacted. Boyle.

Shall I dispute whether there be any such material being that hath such a permanency or fixedness in being? Hale.

From the permanency and immutability of nature hitherto, they argued its permanency and immutability for the future. Burton.

2. Continuance in rest.

Such a punctum to our conceptions is almost equivalent to permanency and rest. Bentley.

PERMANENT. adj. [from permanent, Fr. permanens, Latin.]

1. Durable; not decaying; unchanged.

If the authority of the maker do prove unchangeableness in the laws which God hath made, then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily forever permanent, though they be but of circumstance only. Hobbes.

That eternal duration should be at once, is utterly unconceivable, and that one permanent instant should be commensurate or rather equal to all successions of ages. Mure.

Pure and unchange'd, and needing no defence
From sins, as did the traitor innocent;
Their joy sincere, was in more sorrow mixt.
Eternity stands permanent and fixt. Dryden.

2. Of long continuance.

His meaning is, that in these, or such other light injuries, which either leave no permanent tinct, or only such as may be born without any great prejudice, we should exercise our patience. Kentwell.

PERMISSION. n. s. [from permissio, French; permissus, Lat.] Allowance; grant of liberty.

With thy permission then, and thus forewarn'd,
The willing I go. Milton.

You have given me your permission for this address, and encouraged me by your perusal and approbation. Dryden.

PERMISSIVE. adj. [from permittere, Lat.]

1. Granting liberty, not favour; not hindering, though not approving.

We bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
And not the punishment. Shakspeare.

Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone
By his permissive will, through heav'n and earth. Milton.

2. Granted; suffered without hindrance; not authorized or favoured.

If this doth authorize usury, which before was but permissive, it is better to mitigate usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon's Essays.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom us'd
Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton.

With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Par. L.

PERMISSIVELY. adv. [from permissive.]

By bare allowance; without hindrance.

As to a war for the propagation of the christian faith, I would be glad to hear spoken concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to christian princes to design it. Hazen's Holy War.

PERMISTION. n. s. [from permistus, Latin.]

The act of mixing.

To PERMIST. v. a. [from permistio, Latin; permistire, French.]

What things God doth neither command nor forbid, the same he permist with approbation either to be done or left undone. Hobbes.

2. To suffer, without authorizing or approving.

3. To allow; to suffer.

Women keep silence in the churches: for it is, not permitted unto them to speak. 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden.
Age oppresses us by the same degrees that it instructs us, and permits not that our mortal members, which are frozen with our years, should retain the vigour of our youth. Dryden.

We should not permit an allowed, possible, great and weighty good to slip out of our thoughts, without leaving any selfish, any desire of itself there. Locke.

After men have acquired as much as the laws permit them, they have nothing to do but to take care of the publick. Swift.

4. To give up; to resign.

Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st,
Live well, how long, how short, permit to heav'n. Milton.

If the course of truth be permitted unto itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown's Vulg. Err.
To the gods permit the rest. Dryden.

Where'er can urge ambitious youth to fight,
She pompously displays before their sight,
Laws, empire, all permitted to the sword. Dryden.
Let us not aggravate our sorrows,
But to the god permit the event of things. Addison.

PERMIT. n. s. A written permission from an officer for transporting of goods from place to place, showing the duty on them to have been paid.

PERMITTANCE. n. s. [from permittere.]
Allowance; forbearance of opposition; permission. A bad word.

When this system of air comes, by divine permittance, to be corrupted by poisonous acrimonious freams, what havoc is made in all living creatures? Deism's Physico-Theology.

PERMIXTION. n. s. [from permixtus, Lat.]

The act of mingling; the state of being mingled.

They fell into the opposite extremity of one nature in Christ, the divine and human natures in Christ, in their conceits, by permixtion and confusion of substances, and of properties growing into one upon their adoration. Brewster.

PERMUTATION. n. s. [from permutatio, Fr. permutatio, Latin.] Exchange of one for another.

A permutation of number is frequent in languages. Bentley.

Gold and silver, by their rarity, are wonderfully fitted for the use of permutation for all sorts of commodities. Ray.

To PERMUTE. v. a. [from permuto, Latin; permutare, French.] To exchange.

PERMUTER. n. s. [from permutans, French; from permuto.] An exchanger; he who permutes.

PERNICIOUS. adj. [from perniciosus, Lat. pernicieux, French.]

1. Mischievous in the highest degree; destructive.

To remove all out of the church, whereat they flew themselves to be sorrowful, would be, as we are persuaded, hurtful, is not pernicious thereunto. Hobbes.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accused in the kalendar! Shakspeare.

2. [Pernix, Lat.] Quick. An use which I have found only in Milton, and which, as it produces an ambiguity, ought not to be imitated.

Part incentive reed
Provide, pernicious with one touch to fire. Milton.

PERNICIOUSLY. adv. [from pernicious.]

Destructively; mischievously; ruinously.

Some wilful wits wilfully against their own knowledge, perniciously against their own conscience have tauglit. Alfham

All the commons

Hate him perniciously, and with him
Ten fathom deep. Shakespeare's Henry VIII

PERNICIOUSNESS. n. f. [from pernicious.]

The quality of being pernicious.

PERNICITY. n. f. [from pernix.] Swiftness; celerity.

Others armed with hard shells, others with prickles, the rest that have no such armature en-dued with great swiftness or pernicity. Rayon Great.

PERORATION. n. f. [peroratio, Latin.]

The conclusion of an oration.

What means this passionate discourse?

This peroration with such circumstances? Shakespeare.

True woman to the last—my peroration

I come to speak in spite of suffocation. Smart.

PERPEND. v. a. [perpendo, Latin.]

To weigh in the mind; to consider attentively.

Thus it remains and the remainder thus;

Perpend, my princess, and give ear. Shakespeare.

perpend the imperfection of their discoveries. Brown.

PERPENDER. n. f. [perpignus, French.]

A coping stone.

PERPENDICLE. n. f. [perpendicular, Fr.

perpendicularum, Lat.] Any thing hanging down by a strait line. Dier.

PERPENDICULAR. adj. [perpendicu-

laire, French; perpendicularis, Latin.]

1. Crossing any other line at right angles.

Of two lines, if one be perpendicular,

the other is perpendicular too.

If in a line oblique they atoms rove,

Or in a perpendicular they move;

If some advance not slower in their race,

And some more swift, how could they be entangled?

Blackmore.

The angle of incidence, is that angle, which the line, described by the incident ray, contains with the perpendicular to the reflecting or refracting surface at the point of incidence. Newton's Optiks.

2. Cutting the horizon at right angles.

Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles. Brown.

PERPENDICULAR. n. f. A line crossing the horizon at right angles.

Though the quantity of water thus rising and falling be nearly constant as to the whole, yet it varies in the several parts of the globe; by reason that the vapours float in the atmosphere, and are not restored down again in a perpendicular upon the same precise tract of land. Woodward.

PERPENDICULARLY. adv. [from perpen- dicular.]

1. In such a manner as to cut another line at right angles.

2. In the direction of a strait line up and down.

Ten masts attach make not the altitude

Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shakespeare.

Iron refrigerated North and South, not only acquire a directive faculty, but if cooled upright and perpendicularly, they will also obtain the same.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Shoot up an arrow perpendicularly from the earth,

the arrow will return to your foot again. Alton.

All weights naturally move perpendicularly downward. Ray.

PERPENDICULARITY. n. f. [from per- pendicular.] The state of being perpendicular.

The meeting of two lines is the primary essential mode or difference of an angle; the perpendicularity of these lines is the difference of a right angle.

Watts's Logic

PERPENSION. n. f. [from perpend] Consideration. Not in use.

Unto reasonable perpensions it hath no place in some sciences. Brown's Vulgar Errors

TO PERPETRATE. v. a. [perpetro
Latin; perpetrer, French.]

1. To commit; to act. Always in an illense.

Hear of such a crime

As tragic poets, since the birth of time,

Ne'er feign'd a thronging audience to amaze;

But true and perpetrated in our days. Tate's Jew

My tender infants by my careful fire,

These they returning will to death require,

Will perpetrate on them the first design,

And take the forfeit of their heads for mine. Dryden.

The forest, which, in after-times,

Fierce Romulus, for perpetrated crimes,

A sacred refuge made. Dryden

2. It is used by Butler in a neutral sense in compliance with his verse, but not properly.

Succeds, the mark no mortal wit,

Or surest hand, can always hit;

For whatso'er we perpetrate,

We do but row, we're steer'd by fate. Hudibras

PERPETRATION. n. f. [from perpetrate.]

1. The act of committing a crime.

A desperate discontented assassin would, after the perpetration, have honested a mere private revenge. Wotton

A woman, who lends an ear to a seducer, may be infensibly drawn into the perpetration of the most violent acts. Clarissa.

2. A bad action.

The strokes of divine vengeance, or of men's own consciences, always attend injurious perpetra-

PERPETUAL. adj. [perpetuel, French;

perpetuus, Latin.]

1. Never ceasing; eternal with respect to futurity.

Under the same moral, and therefore under the same perpetual law. Holyday

Mine is a love, which must perpetual be,

If you can be so just as I am true. Dryden.

2. Continual; uninterrupted; perennial.

Within those banks rivers now

Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train. Alston.

By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.

3. Perpetual screw. A screw which acts against the teeth of a wheel, and continues its action without end.

A perpetual screw hath the motion of a wheel and the force of a screw, being both infinite.

PERPETUALLY. adv. [from perpetual.]

Constantly; continually; incessantly.

This verse is every where sounding the very thing in your ears; yet the numbers are perpetually varied, so that the same sounds are never repeated twice. Dryden.

In passing from them to great distances, doth it not grow denser and denser perpetually; and thereby cause the gravity of those great bodies towards one another? Newton's Opticks.

The bible and common prayer book in the vulgar tongue, being perpetually read in churches, have proved a kind of standard for language, especially to the common people. Swift.

TO PERPETUATE. v. a. [perpetuer,

French; perpetuo, Latin.]

To make perpetual; to preserve from extinction; to eternize.

Medals, that are at present only mere curiosities, may be of use in the ordinary commerce of life, and at the same time perpetuate the glories of her majesty's reign. Addison.

Man cannot devise any other method so likely to preserve and perpetuate the knowledge and belief of a revelation so necessary to mankind. Forbes.

2. To continue without cessation or intermission:

What is it, but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from their lethargick sleep, and arise from so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life. Hanmonds.

PERPETUATION. n. f. [from perpetuate.]

The act of making perpetual; incessant continuance.

Nourishing hair upon the moles of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom. Brown.

PERPETUITY. n. f. [perpetuité, French;

perpetuitas, Latin.]

1. Duration to all futurity.

For men to alter those laws, which God for per- petuity hath established, were presumption most intolerable. Hooker.

Yet am I better

Than one that's sick o' th' gout, since he had rather

Groan so in perpetuity, than be cur'd

By the sure physician, death. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Time as long again

Would he fill'd up with our thanks;

And yet we should, for perpetuity,

Go hence in debt. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Nothing wanted to his noble and heroic intections, but only to give perpetuity to that which was in his time so happily established. Bacon.

There can be no other assistance of the perpetuity of this church, but what we have from him that built it. Pearson.

2. Exemption from intermission or cessation.

A cycle or period begins again as often as it ends,

and so obtains a perpetuity. Holder.

What the gospel enjoins is a constant disposition of mind to practise all christian virtues, as often as time and opportunity require, and not a perpetuity of exercise and action; it being impossible at one and the same time to discharge variety of duties. Nelson.

3. Something of which there is no end.

A mess of pottage for a birth-right, a present repast for a perpetuity. South.

The ennobling property of the pleasure, that accrues to a man from religion, is, that he that has the property, may be also sure of the perpetuity.

South.

The laws of God as well as of the land

Abhor a perpetuity should stand,

Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power.

Pope.

TO PERPLEX. v. a. [perplexus, Latin.]

1. To disturb with doubtful notions; to entangle; to make anxious; to tease with suspense or ambiguity; to distract;

to embarrass; to puzzle.

Being greatly perplexed in his mind, he determined to go into Persia. Mac. iii. 31.

Themselves with doubts the day and night per-

plex. Dunham.

He perplexed the minds of the fair sex with nice speculations of philosophy, when he should engage their hearts. Dryden.

We can distinguish no general truths, or at least shall be apt to perplex the mind. Locke.

My way of stating the main question is plain and clear; yours obscure and ambiguous: mine is fitted to instruct and inform; yours to perplex and confound a reader. Waterland.

2. To make intricate; to involve; to complicate.

Their

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood.
Milton.

We both are involv'd
In the same intricate perplex'd distress.
Addison.
What was thought obscure, perplex'd, and too hard for our weak parts, will lie open to the understanding in a fair view.
Locke.

3. To plague; to torment; to vex. A sense not proper, nor used.

Chloe's the wonder of her sex,
'Tis well her heart is tender,
How might such killing eyes perplex,
With virtue to defend her.
Granville.

PERPLEX. adj. [perplex, French; perplexus, Lat.] Intricate; difficult. Perplexed is the word in use.

How the soul directs the spirits for the motion of the body, according to the several animal exigents, is perplex in the theory.
Granville's Scip.

Intricately; with involuement.

PERPLEXEDNESS. n. f. [from perplexed.]
1. Embarrassment; anxiety.

2. Intricacy; involuement; difficulty.
Obscurity and perplexedness have been cast upon St. Paul's Epistles from without.
Locke.

PERPLEXITY. n. f. [perplexité, French.]
1. Anxiety; distraction of mind.

The fear of him ever since hath put me into such perplexity, as now you found me.
Sidney.
Perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do, as it were, in a phrensy.
Hooker.

The royal virgin, which beheld from far,
In pensive plight and sad perplexity,
The whole achievement of this doubtful war,
Came running fast to greet his victory.
Spenser.

2. Entanglement; intricacy.
Let him look for the labyrinth; for I cannot discern any, unlets in the perplexity of his own thoughts.
Stillington.

PERPOTATION. n. f. [per and potō, Lat.]
The act of drinking largely.

PERQUISITE. n. f. [perquisitus, Latin.] Something gained by a place or office over and above the settled wages.

Tell me, perfidious, was it fit
To make my cream a perquisite,
And steal to mend your wages?
Widow and Cat.

To an honest mind, the best perquisites of a place are the advantages it gives a man of doing good.
Addison.

To what your lawful perquisites amount.
Swift.

PERQUISITED. adj. [from perquisite.]
Supplied with perquisites.
But what avails the pride of gardens rare,
However royal, or however fair,
If *perquisit*d varlets frequent stand,
And each new walk must a new tax demand?
Savage.

PERQUISITION. n. f. [perquisitus, Latin.]
An accurate inquiry; a thorough search.
Ainsworth.

PERRY. n. f. [poire, French; from poire.] Cyder made of pears.

Perry is the next liquor in esteem after cyder, in the ordering of which, let not your pears be over-ripe before you grind them; and with some sort of pears, the mixing of a few crabs in the grinding is of great advantage, making perry equal to the redstreak cyder.
Mortimer.

TO PERSECUTE. v. a. [persecutus, Fr.
persecutus, Latin.]

To harass with penalties; to pursue with malignity. It is generally used of penalties inflicted for opinions.

A persecuted this way unto the death.
Acts, xxii.
To pursue with repeated acts of vengeance or enmity.

They might have fallen down, being persecuted of vengeance, and scattered abroad.
Wisdom, xl. 20.

Relate,
For what offence the queen of heav'n began
To persecute so brave, so just a man.
Dryden.
3. To importune much: as, he persecutes me with daily solicitations.

PERSECUTION. n. f. [persecution, Fr.
persecutio, Latin; from persecute.]

1. The act or practice of persecuting.
The Jews raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them.
Acts, xiii. 50.
He endeavoured to prepare his charge for the reception of the impending persecution; that they might adorn their profession, and not at the same time suffer for a cause of righteousness, and as evil doers.
Fell.

Heavy persecution shall arise
On all, who in the worship persevere
Of spirit and truth.
Milton.

The deaths and sufferings of the primitive Christians had a great share in the conversion of those learned Pagans, who lived in the ages of persecution.
Addison.

2. The state of being persecuted.

Our necks are under persecution; we labour and have no rest.

tunity in times of affliction and persecution.
Spratt.

PERSECUTOR. n. f. [persecuteur, French;
from persecute.] One who harasses others with continued malignity.

What man can do against them, not afraid,
Though to the death, against such cruelties
With inward confessions recompens'd;
And oft supported so, as shall amaze
Their proudest persecutors.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Henry rejected the pope's supremacy, but retained every corruption besides, and became a cruel persecutor.
Swift.

PERSEVERANCE. n. f. [perseverance, Fr.
perseverantia, Latin.] This word was once improperly accented on the second syllable.]

1. Persistence in any design or attempt; readiness in pursuits; constancy in progress. It is applied alike to good and ill.

The king, becoming graces,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness;
I have no reason in them.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery.
Shakespeare.
They hate repentance more than perseverance in a fault.
King Charles.

Wait the seasons of providence with patience and perseverance in the duties of our calling, what difficulties soever we may encounter.
L'Estrange.

perseverer, French.] This word was anciently accented less properly on the second syllable.] To persist in an attempt; not to give over; not to quit the design.

But my rude musick, which was wont to please
Some dainty ears, cannot with any skill
The dreadful tempest of her wrath appease, Nor move the dolphin from her stubborn will;
But in her pride she doth persevere still.
Spenser.

Thrice happy, if they know
Their happiness, and persevere upright!
Milton.

Thus beginning, thus we persevere;
Our passions yet continue what they were.
Dryden.

To persevere in any evil course, makes you unhappy in this life, and will certainly throw you into everlasting torments in the next.
Wake.

PERSEVERINGLY. adv. [from persevere.]
With perseverance.

TO PERSIST. v. n. [persisto, Latin;
persistor, Fr.] To persevere; to continue firm; not to give over.

Nothing can make a man happy, but that which shall last as long as he lasts, for an immortal soul shall persist in being, not only when profit, pleasure, and honour, but when time itself, shall cease.
Fell.

If they persist in pointing their batteries against particular persons, no laws of war forb'd the making reprisals.
Addison.

PERSISTANCE. } n. f. [from persist. Per- PERSISTENCY. } sistence seems more proper.]

1. The state of persisting; steadiness;

From pert to stupid sinks lupinely down,
In youth a coxcomb, and in age a clown. Spectator.

2. Saucy; petulant; with bold and garrulous loquacity.

All servants might challenge the same liberty, and grow pert upon their masters, and when this sauciness became universal, what less mischief could be expected than an old Scythian rebellion?
Collier on Pride.

A lady bids me in a very pert manner mind my own affairs, and not pretend to meddle with their lens. Addison.

Vanessa
Scarce lift'ed to their idle chat,
Further than sometimes by a frown,
When they grew pert, to pull them down. Swift.

PERTAIN. v. n. [pertinere, Latin.]

To belong; to relate.

As men hate those that affect that honour by ambition, which pertaineth not to them, so are they more odious, who through fear betray the glory which they have. Hayward.

A chevron or ruler of an house, a very honourable bearing, is never seen in the coat of a king, because it pertaineth to a mechanical profession. Pea-bum.

PERTINENCE. n. f. [from perlinere, PERTINENCY. Latin.] Justness of relation to the matter in hand; propriety to the purpose; appositeness.

I have shewn the fitness and perlinency of the apostle's discourse to the persons he addressed to, whereby it appeareth that he was no babbler, and did not talk at random. Bentley.

PERTINENT. adj. [perlinens, Latin;
perlinent, French.]

1. Related to the matter in hand; just to the purpose; not useless to the end proposed; apposite; not foreign from the thing intended.

My caution was more perlinent
Than the rebuke you gave it. Shakespeare.
I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought perlinent to this business. Bacon.

Here I shall seem a little to digress, but you will by and by find it perlinent. Bacon.
If he could find perlinent treatises of it in books, that would reach all the particulars of a man's behaviour, his own ill-fashioned example would spoil
all. Locke.

2. Relating; regarding; concerning. In this sense the word now used is perlin-
ing.

Men shall have just cause, when any thing per-linent unto faith and religion is doubted of, the more willingly to incline their mind towards that which the sentence of so grave, wise and learned in that faculty shall judge most sound. Hobbes.

PERTINENTLY. adv. [from perlinent.]

Appositely; to the purpose.

Be modest and reserved in the presence of thy betters, speaking little, answering perlinently, not interpolating without leave or reason. Taylor.

Nor to each other: but apparent guilt,
And shame, and perlin, and despair. Milton.
The soul, as it is more immediately and strongly affected by this part, so doth it manifest all its passions and perlin by it. Ray.

2. Restlessness of passions

Natures, that have much heat, and great and violent desires and perlin, are not ripe for action, till they have passed the meridian of their years. Bacon's Essay.

3. Disturbance; disorder; confusion; commotion.

Although the long dissensions of the two houses had had lucid intervals, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth into new perlin and calamities. Bacon.

4. Cause of disquiet.

O polish'd perlin golden care!
That keep'st the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night: sleep with it now,
Yet not to sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggen buns,
Sleeps out the watch of night. Shakespeare.

5. Commotion of passions.

Restore yourselves unto your temper, fathers;
And, without perlin, hear me speak. Ben Jonson.

meate.

The labour'd chyle perlin the pores
In all the arterial perforated shores. Blackmore.
Paper dipped in water or oil, the oculus mundi stone steeped in water, linen-cloth oiled or varnished, and many other substances soaked in such liquors as will intimately perlin their little pores, become by that means more transparent than otherwise. Newton.

2. To pass through the whole extension.

Matter, once bereaved of motion, cannot of itself acquire it again, nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or be intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance, that can penetrate and perlin it. Bentley.

What but God

Perlin, adjusts and agitates the whole? Talbot.

PERVASION. n. f. [from perlin.] The act of pervading or passing through.

It seldom be made rather by the ingress and transcursions of the atoms of fire, than by the back propagation of that motion, with which fire beats upon the outside of the vessels, that contain the matter to be melted: both those kinds of fluidity, ascribed to salt-petre, will appear to be caused by the perlin of a foreign body. Byle.

but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

The vessel was first well sealed to prevent cracking, and covered to prevent the falling in of any thing that might unseasonably kindle the petre. Berkeley.
Nitre, while it is in its native state, is called petre-lute, when refined salt petre. Woodward.

PETRESCENT. adj. [from petreus, Latin.]

Growing stone; becoming stone.

A cave, &c. whose arched roof there dropped down a petrescent liquor, which oftentimes before it could fall to the ground congealed. Boyle.

PETRIFICATION. n. s. [from petrifica, Lat.]

1. The act of turning to stone; the state of being turned to stone.

Its concretionary spirit has the seeds of petrification and gorgon within itself. Brown.

2. That which is made stone.

Look over the variety of beautiful shells, petrifications, ores, minerals, stones, and other natural curiosities.

PETRIFICATIVE. adj. [from petrification, Lat.] Having the power to form stone.

There are many to be found, which are but the lapidescences and petrificative mutation of bodies.

PETRIFICATION. n. f. [petrification, French; from petrify.] A body formed by changing other matter to stone.

In these strange petrifications, the hardening of the bodies seems to be effected principally, if not only, as in the induration of the fluid substances of an egg into a chick, by altering the disposition of their parts.

PETRIFICK. adj. [petrificus, Lat.] Having the power to change to stone.

Winter's breath,
A nitrous blast that strikes petrific death.

Death with his mace petrifick, cold and dry,
As with a trident, smote.

TO PETRIFY. v. a. [petrifier, French, petra and fo, Latin.]

1. To change to stone.

2. To make callous; to make obdurate.

Schism is mark'd out by the apostle to the Hebrews, as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces induration.

Though their souls be not yet wholly petrifick, yet every act of sin makes gradual approaches to it.

Full in the midst of Euclid dip at once,
And petrify a genius to a dunce.

Who stifle nature, and subside on art,
Who coin the face, and petrify the heart.

TO PETRIFY. v. n. To become stone.

Like Niobe we marble grow,
And petrify with grief.

PETROL. n. f. [petrole, French.]

Petrol or petroleum is a liquid bitumen, black, floating on the water of springs.

PETRONEL. n. f. [petrnel, French.] A pistol; a small gun used by a horse man.

And he with petronel upheav'd,
Instead of shield the blow receiv'd.

PETTCOY. n. f. [gnaphalium minus.] An herb.

PETTRICOAT. n. f. [petit and coat.] The lower part of a woman's dress.

What trade art thou, Feeble?—A woman's thy-stor, sir.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's pettricoat?

Her feet beneath her pettricoat,
Like little mice, hole in and out,
As if they fear'd the light.

It is a great complement to the sex, that the virtues are generally seen in pettricoats.

To my chok'd typhus, of spectral note,
We trust the important change, the pettricoat;
Oft have we known that feventful fence to fill,
Though stiff with hoops, and arm'd with ribs of whale.

PETTIFOGGER. n. f. [corrupted from petti-voguer; petit and voguer, Fr.] A petty (small) rate lawyer.

The worst and thinnest and least client'd pettifoggers get, under the sweet bait of revenge, more plentiful than a nation of actions.

Your pettifoggers damn their souls
To share with knives in cheating fools.

Consider, my dear, how indecent it is to abandon your shop and follow pettifoggers; there is a great difference between two country chieftains about a barren acre, but you draw yourself in as bail, surety, or solicitor.

Physicians are apt to despise empirics; lawyers, pettifoggers; and merchants, pedlars.

PETTTINESS. n. f. [from petty.] Smallness; littleness; inconsiderableness; unimportance.

The losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, and the disgrace we have digested;
To answer which, his pettiness would bow under.

PETTTISH. adj. [from pett.] Fretful; peevish.

Nor doth their childhood prove their innocence;
They're toward, pettish, and unus'd to smile.

PETTTISHNESS. n. f. [from pettish.] Fretfulness; peevishness.

Like children, when we lose our favourite plaything, we throw away the rest in a fit of pettishness.

PETTTIOES. n. f. [petty and tor.]

1. The feet of a sucking pig.

2. Feet in contempt.

My good clown grew so in love with the wenches song, that he would not sin his pettiness, till he had both tune and words.

PETTY. n. f. [Italian.] The breast; figuratively, privacy.

PETTY. adj. [petit, French.] Small; inconsiderable; inferior; little.

When he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,
He was your enemy.

It is a common experience, that dogs know the do, killer; when, as in time of infection, some petty fellow is sent out to kill the dogs.

It importeth not much, some petty alteration of distance it may make.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass?

From thence a thousand lesser poets sprung,
Like petty princes from the fall of Rome.

I try believe one only chief and great God, which hath been from all eternity; who, when he proposed to make the world, made first other gods of a principal order; and after, the sun, moon, and stars, as petty gods.

By all I have read of petty commonwealths, as well as the great ones, it seems to me, that a free people divide themselves into three powers.

Bolonia water'd by the petty Rhine.

Can an example be given, in the whole course of this war, where we have treated the petty prince, with whom we have had to deal, in so contemptuous a manner?

PETULANCE. n. f. [petulance, Fr. petulantia, Lat.] Sauciness; peevishness; wantonness.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall of parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulance of our words.

Such was others petulancy, that they joyed to see their betters financially outraged and abused.

Wise men knew, that which looked like pride in some, and like petulance in others, would, by experience in affairs and conversation amongst men, be in time wrought off.

However their numbers, as well as their insolence and perverseness increased, many instances of petulancy and scurrility are to be seen in their pamphlets.

There appears in our age a pride and petulancy in youth, zealous to cast off the tendiments of their fathers and teachers.

PETULANT. adj. [petulans, Latin; petulant, French.]

1. Saucy; perverse.

If the opponent lets victory incline to his side, let him shew the force of his argument, without too importunate and petulant demands of an answer.

2. Wanton.

The tongue of a man is so petulant, and his thoughts so variable, that one should not lay too great stress upon any present speeches and opinions.

PETULANTLY. adv. [from petulant.]

With petulance; with saucy pertness.

PEW. n. f. [puye, Dutch.] A feat inclosed in a church.

When Sir Thomas More was lord chancellor, he did use, at mass, to sit in the chancel, and his lady in a pew.

Should our sex take it into their heads to wear trunk breeches at church, a man and his wife would fill a whole pew.

She decently, in form, pays heav'n its due;
And makes a civil visit to her pew.

PEWET. n. f. [piewit, Dutch; vannillus.]

1. A water fowl.

We reckon the dip-chick, so named of his diving and littleness, pulchus, peewits, meawes.

2. The lapwing.

PEWTER. n. f. [peauter, Dutch.]

1. A compound of metals; an artificial metal.

Nine parts or more of tin, with one of regulus of antimony, compose pewter.

Coarse pewter is made of fine tin and lead.

The pewter, into which no water could enter, became more white, and like to silver, and less flexible.

Pewter dishes, with water in them, will not melt easily, but without it they will, nay, butter or oil, in themselves inflammable, yet, by their moisture, will hinder melting.

2. The plates and dishes in a house.

The eye of the mistress was wont to make her pewter shine.

PEWTERER. n. f. [from pewter.] A smith who works in pewter.

He shall charge you and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer.

We caused a skilful pewterer to clothe the vessel in our presence with solder exquisitely.

PHENOMENON. n. f. See PHENOMENON. This has sometimes phenomena in the plural.

[Phaenomenon, Gr.] An appearance in the works of nature.

The paper was black, and the colours intense and thick, that the phenomenon might be conspicuous.

PHAGEDENA. n. f. [phagidena; from phageo, to eat.] An ulcer, where the sharpness of the humours eats away the flesh.

PHAGIDENICK. adj. [phagedenique, French.] Eating; corroding.

Phagedenic medicines, are those which eat away fungous or proud flesh.

A bubo, according to its malignancy, either proves easily curable, or terminates in a phagedenic ulcer with jagged lips.

When they are very putrid and consusive, which circumstances give them the name of foul phagedenic ulcers, some spirits of wine should be added to the fermentation.

PHALANX. n. f. [phalanx, Latin; phalange, French.] A troop of men closely embodied.

Far otherwise than inviolable saints, in cubic phalanx firm, advanced entire, invulnerable, impenetrably arm'd.

The Grecian phalanx, mov'd as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his power.

PHANTASM. n. f. [Phantasma, Gr.]

PHANTASMA. n. f. [phantasma, Gr.] Vain and airy appearance; something appearing only to imagination.

All the interim is Like a phantasma or a hideous dream. Shakespeare.
This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court.

A phantasm, a monacho, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his book-mates. Shakespeare.

They believe, and they believe amiss, because they be but phantasies or apparitions. Raleigh's Hist.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy body or phantasm with incredible affection; partly out of their great devotion to the house of York, partly out of proud humour. Bacon's Henry VII.

Why,
In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st
Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son. Milt.
Assaying, by his devilish art, to reach
The organs of her fancy, and with them forge Illusions, as he list, phantasms and dreams. Milton.

PHANTASTICAL. } See FANTASTICAL.

PHANTASTICK. }

PHANTOM. n. f. [phantome, French.]

1. A spectre; an apparition.

If he cannot help believing, that such things he saw and heard, he may still have room to believe that what this airy phantom said is not absolutely to be relied on. Atterbury.

A constant vapour o'er the palace flies;
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
Dreadful as hermits dreams in haunted shades,
Or bright as visions of expiring maids. Pope.

2. A fancied vision.

Restless and impatient to try every overture of present happiness, he hunts a phantom he can never overtake. Rogers.

As Pallas will'd, along the fable skies,
To calm the queen, the phantom sister flies. Pope.

PHARISÆICAL. adj. [from pharisee.]

Ritual; externally religious; from the sect of the Pharisees, whose religion consisted almost wholly in ceremonies.

The causes of superstition are pleasing and sensual rites, excess of outward and pharisaical holiness, over great reverence of traditions which cannot but load the church. Bacon.

Suffer us not to be deluded with pharisaical washings instead of christian reformings. K. Charles.

PHARMACEUTICAL. } adj. [φαρμακeutikē, PHARMACEUTICK. } from φάρμακον.]

Relating to the knowledge or art of pharmacy, and preparation of medicines.

PHARMACOLOGIST. n. f. [φαρμακολόγος and λόγος.] One who writes upon drugs.

The ostrea is recommended by the pharmacolo- gists as an absorbent and conglutinator of broken bones. Woodward on Puffins.

PHARMACOLOGY. n. f. [φάρμακον and λογία.] The knowledge of drugs and medicines.

PHARMACOPŒIA. n. f. [φάρμακον and ποιήω; pharmacopée, French.] A dis-pensatory; a book containing rules for the composition of medicines.

PHARMACOPOLIST. n. f. [φάρμακον and πώληω; pharmacopole, Fr.] An apothecary;
one who sells medicines.

PHARMACY. n. f. [from φάρμακον, a medicine; pharmacia, French.] The art or practice of preparing medicines; the trade of apothecary.

Each dose she goddess weighs with watchful eye,
So nice her art in impious pharmacy. Caen.

PHAROS. } n. f. [from Pharos in Egypt.]

PHARE. } A light-house; a lantern

Shew the shore to direct sailors.

He augmented and repaired the port of Orlé, built a pharos or light-house. Arbutnot on Coins.

PHARYNGOTOMY. n. f. [φάρυγξ and τομή.] The act of making an incision into the wind-pipe, used when some tumour in the throat hinders respiration.

PHASELS. n. f. [phaseoli, Lat.] French beans. Answerth.

PHASIS. n. f. In the plural phases [φάσις; phases, French.] Appearance exhibited by any body; as the changes of the moon.

All the hypotheses yet contrived, were built upon too narrow an inspection of the phases of the universe. Clauville.

He o'er the seas shall love or fame pursue,
And other months, another phase view;
Fixt to the rudder, he shall boldly steer,
And pass those rocks which Tiphys us'd to fear. Cicero.

PHASM. n. f. [φάσμα.] Appearance;
phantom; fancied apparition.

Thence proceed many aerial fictions and phasms, and chimeras created by the vanity of our own hearts or seduction of evil spirits, and not planted in them by God. Hammond.

PHEASANT. n. f. [φάισαν, Fr. phasianus, from Phasis, the river of Cholchos.] A kind of wild cock.

The hardest to draw are tame birds; as the cock, peacock, and phasant. Peacocks on Drawing.
Preach as I please, I doubt our curious men
Will chide a phasant still before a hen. Pope.

PHEER. n. f. A companion. See FEER.
Spenser.

TO PHEERE. v. a. [perhaps to feaze.] To comb; to fleece; to curry.
An he be proud with me, I'll pheer his pride. Shakespeare.

PHENICOPTER. n. f. [φαινικοπτέρη; phie- nicopteris, Lat.] A kind of bird, which is thus described by Martial:

Dat mihi penna rubens nomen sed lin- gua gulefis

Nota juxta; quid si garrula lingua foret?
He blended together the divers of quillheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phe- nicopters, and the molts or lampies. Hakewell.

PHENIX. n. f. [φαινίξ; phenix, Lat.] The bird which is supposed to exist single,
and to rise again from its own ashes.

There is one rice, the phenix throne, one phenix
At this hour reigning there. Shakespeare's Tempest.
To all the towns he seems a phenix. Milton.
Having the idea of a phenix in my mind, the first enquiry is, whether such a thing does exist? Locke.

PHENOMENON. n. f. [φαινόμενον; pheno- mene, French: it is therefore often written phenomenon; but being naturalised, it has changed the e, which is not in the English language, to i. But if it has the original plural termination pha- nomena, it should, I think, be written with e.]

1. Appearance; visible quality.

Short-sighted minds are unfit to make philo- sophers, whose business it is to describe, in comprehensive theories, the phenomena of the world and their causes. Burnet.

These are curiosities of little or no moment to the understanding the phenomena of nature. Newton.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is gravitation, whereby all bodies in the vicinity of the earth press towards its centre. Newton's Sermons.

2. Any thing that strikes by any new appearance.

PHIAL. n. f. [phiala, Latin; phiole, Fr.]
A small bottle.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole
With juice of curbed hebenon in a phial. Shakespeare.
He proves his explanations by experiments made with a phial of water, and with globes of glass filled with water. Newton.

PHILANTHROPY. n. f. [φιλαν and άνθρω- πία.] Love of mankind; good nature.

Such a transient temporary good nature is not that philanthropy, that love of mankind, which deserves the title of a moral virtue. Addison.

PHILIPPICK. n. f. [from the invectives of Demosthenes against Philip of Macedon.] Any invective declamation.

PHILOLOGER. n. f. [φιλόλογος.] One whose chief study is language; a grammarian; a critic.

Philologers and critical discourses, who look beyond the shell and obvious exterior of things, will not be angry with our narrower explorations. Brown.
You expect, that I should discourse of this matter like a naturalist, not a philologist. Boyle.

The best philologists say, that the original word does not only signify domestic, as opposed to foreign, but also private, as opposed to common. Spencer's Sermons.

PHILOLOGICAL. adj. [from philology.]
Critical; grammatical.

Studies, called philological, are history, language, grammar, rhetoric, poetry, and criticism. Watts.
He who pretends to the learned professions, if he doth not arise to be a critic himself in phi- lological matters, should frequently converse with dictionaries, paraphrases, commentators, or other criticks, which may relieve any difficulties. Watts.

PHILOLOGIST. n. f. See PHILOGER.

A critic; a grammarian.

PHILOLOGY. n. f. [φιλολογία; philo- logie, French.] Criticism; grammatical learning. See PHILOGICAL.

Temper all discourses of philology with interper-sions of morality. Walker.

PHILOMELA. } n. f. [from Philemela, PHILOMELA } changed into a bird.]

The nightingale.
Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When others rage, and philemels grow cold,
And philemel becometh dumb. Shakespeare.

Admires the jay the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk when philemela sings? Pope.

PHILOMET. adj. [corrupted from feuille verte, a dead leaf.] Coloured like a dead leaf.

One of them was blue, another yellow, and another philemet; the fourth was of a pink colour, and the fifth of a pale green. Addison.

PHILOSOPHEME. n. f. [φιλοσόφημα.] Principle of reasoning; theorem. An unusual word.

You will learn how to address yourself to children for their benefit, and derive some useful philo- sophemes for your own entertainment. Watts.

PHILOSOPHER. n. f. [φιλοσοφία, Latin;
philosophe, French.] A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

Many found in belief have been also great philo- sophers. Hooker.

The philosopher hath long ago told us, that according to the divers natures of things, so must the evidences to them be, and that 'tis an argument of an undisciplined wit not to acknowledge this. Watts.

They all our former philosophers despise,
And would our faith by force of reason try. Dryden.

If the philosophers by us had been too wary in their observations and sincere in their reports, as those, who call themselves philosophers, ought to have been, our acquaintance with the book, here about us had been much greater. Locke.

Adam, in the state of innocence, came into the world a philosophy, which sufficiently appeared by his writing the nature of things upon their names; he could view essences in the universe, and read terms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

PHILOSOPHERS stone. n. s. A stone dreamed of by alchemists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

That stone

Philosophers in vain so long have sought. Milton.

PHILOSOPHICAL. adj. [philosophique, French; from philosophy.]

1. Belonging to philosophy; suitable to a philosopher; formed by philosophy.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity:

The stoick last in philosophick pride

By him call'd virtue; and his virtuous man,

Wise, perfect in himself, and all possessing. Milton.

How could our chymick friends go on

To find the philosophick stone? Pror.

When the safety of the publick is endangered, the appearance of a philosophical or affected indolence must arise either from stupidity or perfidiousness. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Skilled in philosophy.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakespeare.

Acquaintance with God is not a speculative knowledge, built on abstracted reasonings about his nature and essence, such as philosophical minds often busy themselves in, without reaping from thence any advantage towards regulating their passions, but practical knowledge. Atterbury.

3. Frugal; abstemious.

This is what nature's wants may well suffice:

But since among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophick fare,

I'll mingle something of our times to please. Dryd.

PHILOSOPHICALLY. adv. [from philosophical.] In a philosophical manner; rationally; wisely.

The law of commonwealths that cut off the right hand of malefactors, if philosophically executed, is impartial; otherwise the amputation not equally punisheth all. Brown.

No man has ever treated the passion of love with so much delicacy of thought and of expression, or searched into the nature of it more philosophically than Ovid. Dryden.

If natural laws were once settled, they are never to be reversed; to violate and infringe them, is the same as what we call miracle, and doth not sound very philosophically out of the mouth of an atheist. Bentley's Sermons.

7. PHILOSOPHIZE. v. a. [from philosophy.] To play the philosopher; to reason like a philosopher; to moralize; to search into nature; to inquire into the causes of effects.

Quintus occult to Aristotle, must be so to us; and we must not philosophize beyond sympathy and antipathy. Glennville.

The wax philosophized upon the matter, and finding out at last that it was burning made the brick so hard, cast itself into the fire. Leffrange.

Two doctors of the schools were philosophizing upon the advantages of mankind above all other creatures. Leffrange.

Some of our philosophy n. s. divines have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have annihilated, that by their force mankind has been able to find out God. Dryden.

PHILOSOPHY. n. s. [philosophie, Fr. philosophia, Latin.] Knowledge natural or moral.

Had never read, heard, nor seen any thing, I never any taste of philosophy nor inward feeling in myself, which for a while I did not call to my recour. Sidney.

Hang up philosophy;

Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,

Displant a crown, reverse a prince's doom,

It helps not. Shakespeare.

The progress you have made in philosophy, hath enabled you to benefit yourself with what I have written. Dryd.

2. Hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained.

We shall in vain interpret their words by the notions of our philosophy, and the doctrines in our schools. Locke.

3. Reasoning; argumentation.

Of good and evil much they argu'd then,

Vain wisdom all and taste philosophy. Milton.

His decisions are the judgment of his passions not of his reason, the philosophy of the sinner not of the man. Rogers.

4. The course of sciences read in the schools.

PHILTER. n. s. [philtra; philtre, French.]

Something to cause love.

The melting kiss that tips

The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleveland.

This cup a cure for both our ills has brought,

You need not fear a philtre in the draught. Dryd.

A philtre that has neither drug nor enchantment in it, love if you would taste love. Alaïsin.

To PHILTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To charm to love.

Let not those that have repudiated the more inviting sins, shew themselves philtred and bewitched by this. Gow. of the Rengue.

PHIZ. n. s. [This word is formed by a ridiculous contraction from physiognomy, and should therefore, if it be written at all, be written phyz.] The face, in a sense of contempt.

His air was too proud, and his features amiss,

As if being a traitor had alter'd his phiz. Stepney.

PHLEBOTOMIST. n. s. [phlebotomiste, Fr. from φλεβ and τομή.] One that opens a vein; a bloodletter.

To PLEBOTOMIZE. v. a. [phlebotomiser, French; from phlebotomy.] To let blood.

The frail bodies of men must have an evacuation for their humours, and be phlebotomized.

Shovel's England's Tears.

PHLEBOTOMY. n. s. [φλεβοτομία, φλεβ, φλεβ, vena, and τομή; phlebotomie, Fr.] Bloodletting; the act or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

Phlebotomy is not cure, but mischief; the blood so flowing as if the body were all vein. Halyday.

Although in indispositions of the liver or spleen, considerations are made in phlebotomy to their situation, yet, when the heart is affected, it is thought as effectual to bleed on the right as the left. Brown.

Pains for the spending of the spirits, come nearest to the copious and swift loss of spirits by phlebotomy. Stavely.

PHLEGM. n. s. [φlegma; phlegma, Fr.]

1. The watry humour of the body, which, when it predominates, is supposed to produce sluggishness or dulness.

Make the proper use of each extreme, And write with fury, but correct with phlegm. Rofomon.

He who supreme in judgment, as in wit, Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ, Yet judg'd with coolness, though he sung with fire; His precepts teach but what his works inspire. Our critics take a contrary extreme, They judge with fury, but they write with phlegm. Pope.

Let melancholy rule supreme, Choler preside, or blood or phlegm.

It makes no difference in the case, Nor is complexion honour's place. Swift.

2. Water, among the chymists.

A linen cloth, dipped in common spirit of wine, is not burnt by the flame, because the phlegm of the liquor defends the cloth. Boyle.

PHLEGMAGOGUES. n. s. [φlegμαγος and αγος; phlegmagogue, French.] A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.

The pituitous temper of the stomachic ferment must be corrected, and phlegmagogues must evacuate it. Flores.

PHLEGMATICK. adj. [φlegματικος; phlegmaticus, Fr. from phlegm.]

1. Abounding in phlegm.

The putrid vapour, though exciting a fever, do colliquate the phlegmatick humours of the body. Harvey.

 their imagination is affected with within. Marway.

What astrum, what phrenetick mood,
 Makes you thus lavish of your blood? Hudibras.

The world was little better than a common fold of phreneticks and bedlams. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

PHRENSY. n. f. [from φρενίς; phre- nesis, French; whence, by contraction, phrensy] Madness; frantickness. This is too often written fr frenzy. See FRENZY.

Many never think on God, but in extremity of fear, and then perplexity not suffering them to be idle, they think and do as it were in a phrensy.
Hooker.

Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy. Milton.
 Would they only please themselves in the delusion, the phrensy were more innocent; but lunaticks will needs be kings. Dunlop of Piet.

PHYSICAL. adj. [physique, French; from physick.]

1. Relating to nature or to natural philosophy; not moral.

The physical notion of necessity, that without which the work cannot possibly be done; it cannot be affirmed of all the articles of the creed, that they are thus necessary. Hammond.

I call that physical certainty which doth depend upon the evidence of sense, which is the first and highest kind of evidence of which human nature is capable. Wilkins.

To reflect on those innumerable secrets of nature and physical philosophy, which Homer wrought in his allegories, what a new scene of wonder may this afford us! Pope.

Charity in its origin is a physical and necessary consequence of the principle of re-union. Cb yne.

2. Pertaining to the science of healing:
 as, a physical treatise, physical herbs.

3. Medicinal; helpful to health.

 Of the dank morning? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

4. Resembling physick: as, a physical taste.

PHYSICALLY. adv. [from physical.]

1. According to nature; by natural operation; in the way or sense of natural philosophy; not morally.

Time measuring out their motion, informs us of the periods and terms of their duration, rather than effecteth or physically produceth the same. Brown.

The outward act of worship may be considered physically and abstractly from any law, and so it depends upon the nature of the intention, and morally, as good or evil: and so it receives its denomination from the law. Stillingfleet.

Though the act of the will commanding, and the act of any other faculty executing that which is so commanded, be physically and in the precise nature of things distinct, yet morally as they proceed from one entire, free, moral agent, may pass for one and the same action. Saunders's Sermons.

I do not say, that the nature of light consists in small round globules, for I am not now treating physically of light or colours. Locke.

2. According to the science of medicine;

He that lives physically, must live miserably.

Chaucer.

PHYSICIAN. n. f. [physicien, French; from physick.] One who professes the art of healing.

Trust not the physician,
 His antidotes are poison, and he stays
 More than you rob. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Some physicians are so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and others are so regular, as they respect not sufficiently the condition of the patient.

Bacon's Essays.

His gratulatory verse to king Henry is not more witty than the epigram upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, who had been the death of thousands. Pepham of Poetry.

Taught by thy art divine, the sage physician
 Eludes the urn; and chafes, or exiles death. Prior.

PHYSICK. n. f. [φυσική, which, originally signifying natural philosophy, has been transferred in many modern languages to medicine.]

1. The science of healing.

Were it my business to understand physick, wou'd not the safer way be to consult nature herself in the history of diseases and their cures, than oppose the principles of the dogmatists, methodists, or chymists? Locke.

2. Medicines; remedies.

In itself we desire health, physick only for health's sake. Hack.

Use physick or ever thou be sick. Ecc. xviii. 19.
 Prayer is the best physick for many melancholy diseases. Peacocks.

He escapes the best, who nature to repair
 Draws physick from the fields in draughts of vital air.
Dryden.

As all seasons are not proper for physick, so all times are not fit for purging the body politick.
Darwin.

PHYSIOGNOMIST. n. f. Fr. from physio- gnomy.] One who judges of the temper or future fortune by the features of the face.

Dionysius, when he should have been put to death by the Turk, a physiognomist wished he might not die, because he would sow much dissension among the Christians. Peacocks.

Apelles made his pictures so very like, that a physiognomist and fortune-teller foretold, by looking on them, the time of their deaths whom those pictures represented. Dryden.

Let the physiognomist examine his features.
Aschmole and Pope.

PHYSIOGNOMICK. adj. [physiognomus-

PHYSIOGNOMONICK. adj. [φυσιογνωμονικός; from physio- gnomy.] Drawn from the contempla-

gnomy; φυσιογνωμονία; physiognomie, Fr.]

1. The act of discovering the temper, and foreknowing the fortune, by the features of the face.

In all physiognomy, the lineaments of the body will discover those natural inclinations of the mind which dissimulation will conceal, or discipline will suppress. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The face; the cast of the look.

The astrologer, who spells the stars,
 Mistakes his globes, and in her brighter eye
 Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Claveland.

They'll find in the physiognomies

O'er the planets all men's destinies. Hudibras.

The end of portraits consists in expressing the true temper of those persons which it represents, and to make known their physiognomy. Dryden's Duress.
 The distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain and visible with time and age; but the peculiar phy-siognomy of the mind is most discernible in children.
Locke.

PHYSIOLOGICAL. adj. [from physiology.] Relating to the doctrine of the natural constitution of things.

Some of them seem rather metaphysical than physiological notions. Boyle.

against all other reasons, and let the compass be rather in your eyes than in your hands. Dryden.

W.

We shall extinguish this melancholy thought, of our being overlooked by our Maker, if we consider, in the first place, that he is omnipotent; and in the second, that he is omniscient. Addison.

9. State of actual operation; effect.

I know him a notorious liar;
Think him a great way too, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils fit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's feeble bones
Look black in the cold wind. Shakespeare.
These fair overtures made by men well esteemed for honest dealing, could take no place. Haywood.
They are defect, not in the heart, but in the brain; for they take place in the stoutest natures. Bacon.

With faults confess'd commission'd her to go,
If pity yet had place, and reconcile her foe. Dryden.
Where aims take place, all other pleas are vain;
Love taught me force, and force shall love maintain. Dryden.

To the joy of mankind, the unhappy omel took not place. Dryden's Dedication to his Fables.
Somewhat may be invented, perhaps more excellent than the first design, though Virgil must be still excepted, when that perhaps takes place. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

It is stupidly foolish to venture our salvation upon an experiment, which we have all the reason imaginable to think God will not suffer to take place. Atterbury.

10. Existence.

Mixt government, partaking of the known forms received in the schools, is by no means of Gothic invention, but hath place in nature and reason. Swift.

11. Rank; order of priority.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and this centre,
Observe degree, priority, and place. Shakespeare.

12. Precedence; priority. This sense is commonly used in the phrase take place.

Do you think I'd walk in any plot,
Where madam Sempionia should take place of me,
And Fulvia come i' the rear? Ben Jonson's Catiline.
There would be left no measures of credible and incredible, if doubtful propositions take place before self-evident. Locke.

As a British freeholder, I should not scruple making place of a French marquis. Addison's Freeb.

13. Office; publick character or employment.

Do you your office, or give up your place,
And you shall well be spared. Shakespeare.

If I'm traduc'd by tongue, that neither know
My faculties nor person;
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare.

The horsemen came to Lodowick, as unto the most valiant captain, beseeching him, instead of their treacherous general, to take upon him the place. Keble's History of the Turks.

Is not the bishops bill deny'd,
And we still threaten'd to be try'd?
You see the knife embraces
Those counsels he approv'd before;
Nor doth he promise, which is more,
That we shall have their places. Denham.

Pensions in private were the senate's aim,
And patriots for a place abandon'd fame. Garth.
Some magistrates are contented, that their place should adorn them; and some study to adorn their place, and reflect back the lustre they receive from thence. Dryden.

14. Room; way; place for appearing or acting given by custom; not opposition.

Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath. Romans.
He stood astride, and to his fellows cry'd,
Give place, and I mark the difference if you can,
Between a woin in warrior and a man. Dryden.

Victorious York did suit, with fam'd success, his known valour make the Dutch give place. Dryden.

The rustic honours of the scythe and share,
Give place to swords and plumes, the pride of war. Dryden.

15. Ground; room.

Ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you. John, viii. 37.
There is no place of doubting, but that it was the very same. Hammond's Fundamentals.

16. Station in life.

God would give them, in their several places and callings, all spiritual and temporal blessings, which he less wanting to them. Duty of Man.

To PLACE. v. a. [placer, French; from the noun.]

1. To put in any place, rank, condition, or office.

Place such over them to be rulers. Ex. xviii. 21.
He placed forces in all the fenced cities. 2 Chron.
And I will place within them as a guide
My umpire conscience, whom if they will hear,
Light after light well us'd they shall attain,
And at the end persisting safe arrive. Milton.
Our two first parents yet the only two
Of mankind in the happy garden plac'd. Milton.

2. To fix; to settle; to establish.

Those accusations had been more reasonable, if placed on inferior persons. Dryden's Aurungzeb.
God or nature has not any where placed any such jurisdiction in the first born. Locke.

3. To put out at interest.

'Twas his care
To place on good security his gold. Pope.

placid motion of the spirits, that men's actions be free. Bacon.

2. Soft; kind; mild.

That placid aspect and meek regard,
Rather than aggravate my evil state,
Would stand between me and thy father's ire. Mil.

PLA'CIDLY. adv. [from placid.] Mildly;
gently.

If into a phial, filled with good spirit of nitre, you cast a piece of iron, the liquor, whose parts moved uniformly ar' placidly before, by altering its motion, it begins to pulsate and teaster abroad particles of the iron. Boyle.

The water easily insinuates itself into, and placidly defends the tubes and vessels of vegetables. Woodward.

PLA'CIT. n. f. [placitum, Lat.] Decree; determination.

We spend time in defence of their places, which might have been employed upon the universal author. Glanville.

You might have pinch'd a plaquet, it was senseless. Shakespeare.

The bone-ach is the curse dependant on those that was for a plaquet. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.

PLA'GIARISM. n. f. [from plagary.]

Theft; literary adoption of the thoughts or works of another.

With great impropriety, as well as plagia-sim, they have most injuriously been transferred into proverbial maxims. Swift.

PLA'GIARY. n. f. [from plagium, Lat.]

1. A thief in literature; one who steals the thoughts or writings of another.

The ensuing discourse, left I chance to be tra-duced into a plagary by him who has played the thief, was one of those that, by a worthy hand, were stolen from me. South.

Without invention, a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagary of others; both are allowed sometimes to copy and transpire. Dryden.

2. The crime of literary theft. Not used.

Plagary had not its activity with printing, but began when the paucity of books forced wanton that invention. Brown.

PLAGUE. n. f. [plage, Dutch; plague,
Teutonic; plaga, Latin; wagn.]

1. Pestilence; a disease eminently contagious and destructive.

Thou art a bile,
A plague-lore or imbois'd carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The general opinion is, that years hot and moist are most pestilent; yet many times there have been great plagues in dry years. Bacon's Natural History.

Snakes, that use within thy house for shade,
Securely lurk, and, like a plague, invade Thy cattle with venom. May's Virgil.

All those plagues, which earth and air had brooded,
First on inferior creatures try'd their force,
And last they seiz'd on man. Lee and Dryden.

2. State of misery.

I am set in my plague, and my heaviness I ever in my sight. Psalm xxviii. 17.

3. Any thing troublesome or vexatious.

'Tis the time's plague, when madmen lead the blind. Shakespeare.

I am not mad, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity. Shakespeare.

Good or bad company is the greatest blessing or greatest plague of life. L'Estrange.

Sometimes my plague, sometimes my darling,
Kissing to day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.

To PLAQUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To infect with pestilence.

2. To infect with disease; to oppress with calamity.

Say my request's unjust,
And spurn me back, but if it be not so,
Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee. Shakespeare.

Thus were they plagu'd
And worn with famine. Milton.

3. To trouble; to tease; to vex; to harass; to torment; to afflict; to distress;
to torture; to embarrass; to excruciate;
to make uneasy; to disturb. In this sense it is used ludicrously.

If her nature be so,
That she will plague the man that loves her most,
And take delight to encrease a wretch's woe,
Then all her nature's goodly gifts are lost. Spenser.

People are storm'd out of their reason, plagu'd into a compliance, and forced to yield in their own defence. Collier.

When a Neapolitan cavalier has nothing else to do, he gravely shuts himself up in his closet, and falls a tumbling over his papers, to see if he can start a law suit, and plague any of his neighbours. Addison.

PLA'GUILY. adv. [from plagu.] Vexatiously; horribly. A low word.

This whispering bodes me no good; but he has me so plaguily under the lash, I dare not interrupt him. Dryden.

You look'd scornful, and swift at the dean;
But he durst not so much as once open his lips,
And the doctor was plaguily down in the hips. Swift.

PLA'GUY. adj. [from plagu.] Vexatious; troublesome. A low word.

Of heats,
Add one more to the plaguy bill. Donne.

What perils do environ
The man that meddles with cold iron?
What plaguy mischiefs and mishaps
Do dog him still with alter claps? Hudibras.

PLA'CE. n. f. [plate, Dutch.] A flat fish.

Of flat fish there are soles, flounders, dabs, and plaques. Carew.

PLAID. n. f. A striped or variegated cloth; an outer loose weed worn much by the Highlanders in Scotland: there is a particular kind worn too by the women.

PLANCHING. n. s. In carpentry, the laying the floors in a building. Diag.

PLANE. n. s. [planus, Latin.] Plane is commonly used in popular language, and plane in geometry.]

1. A level surface.

Comets, as often as they are visible to us, move in planes inclined to the plane of the ecliptick, in all kinds of angles. Bentley.

Projectiles would ever move on in the same right line, did not the air, their own gravity, or the ruggedness of the plane on which they move, stop their motion. Cibyne.

2. [Plane, French.] An instrument by which the surface of boards is smoothed.

PLANE-TREE. n. s. [platanus, Latin;
plane, platanus, French.]

The plane-tree hath an attenuated flower, consisting of several slender stamens, which are all collected into spherical little balls and are barren;
but the embryos of the fruit, which are produced on separate parts of the same trees, are turgid, and afterwards become large spherical balls, containing many offshoot seeds intermixed with down: it is generally supposed, that the introduction of this tree into England is owing to lord chancellor Bacon. Miller.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane. Dryden.

PLANET. n. s. [planeta, Lat., πλανήτης;
planette, French.]

Planets are the errant or wandering stars, and which are not like the fixt ones always in the same position to one another: we now number the earth among the primary planets, because we know it moves round the sun, as Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, and Mercury do, and that in a path or circle between Mars and Venus: and the moon is accounted among the secondary planets or satellites of the primary, since she moves round the earth:
all the planets have, besides their motion round the sun, which makes their year, also a motion round their own axes, which makes their day; as the earth's revolving so makes our day and night:
it is more than probable, that the diameter of all the planets are longer than their axes: we know
'tis so in our earth, and Plamsted and Cassini found it to be so in Jupiter: Sir Isaac Newton asserts our earth's equatorial diameter to exceed the other about thirty-four miles; and indeed else the motion of the earth would make the sea rise so high at the equator, as to drown all the parts thereabouts. Harris.

Barbarous Villains! hath this lovely face
Pul'd like a wand'ring planet over me,
And could it not intire them to relent? Shakef.

And planets, planets struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There are seven planets or errant stars in the lower orbs of heaven. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Chaldeans were much devoted to astrological devices, and had an opinion that every hour of the day was governed by a particular planet, reckoning them according to their usual order, Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Venus, Mercury, Luna. Wilkins.

PLANETARY. adj. [planétaire, French;
from planet.]

1. Pertaining to the planets.

Their planetary motions and aspects. Milton.

To marble and to brass, such features give,
Describe the stars and planetary way,
And trace the footsteps of eternal day. Granville.

2. Under the domination of any particular planet.

Depicting they mourn their fate, whom Circe's
power,

That watch'd the moon and planetary hour,
With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd. Dryden.

I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and,
I think, I have a piece of that leaden planet in me;
I am no way facetious. Addison.

3. Produced by the planets.

Here's gold, go on;

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare's Timon.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun,
the moon and stars, as if we were villains by an enforced obedience of planetary influence. Shakespeare.

4. Having the nature of a planet; errattick.

We behold bright planetary Jove,
Sublime in air through his wide province move,
Four second planets his dominion own,
And round him turn, as round the earth the moon. Blackmore.

PLANETICAL. adj. [from planet.] Pertaining to planets.

It took two object glasses, the one a planoconvex for a fourteen feet telescope, and the other a large double convex for one of about fifty feet.

Newton's Opticks.

PLANT, n. f. [plant, Fr. planta, Latin.]

1. Any thing produced from seed; any vegetable production.

What comes under this denomination, Ray has distributed under twenty-seven genders or kinds:

1. The imperfect plants, which do either totally want both flower and seed, or else seem to do so.

2. Plants producing either no flower at all, or an imperfect one, whose seed is so small as not to be discernible by the naked eye.

3. Those whose seeds are not so small, as hardly to be invisible, but yet have an imperfect or staminate flower, such as a rose as is without the petals, having only the stamina and the perianthium.

4. Such as have a compound flower, and emit a kind of white juice or milk when their stalks are cut off or their branches broken off.

5. Such as have a compound flower of a discous figure, the seed papous, or winged with down, but emit no milk.

6. The herbæ capitatae, or such whose flower is composed of many small, long, fistulous or hollow flowers gathered round together in a round button or head, which is usually covered with a squamous or scaly coat.

7. Such as have their leaves entire and undivided into jags.

8. The compositæ, which have a compound discous flower, but the seeds have no down adhering to them.

9. Plants with a perfect flower, and having only one single seed belonging to each single flower.

10. Such as have rough, hairy or bristly seeds.

11. The umbelliferous plants, which have a pentapetalous flower, and belonging to each single flower are two seeds, lying naked and joining together, they are called umbelliferous, because the plant, with its branches and flowers, hath an head like a lady's umbrella; [1.] Such as have a broad flat seed almost of the figure of a leaf, which are encompassed round about with something like leaves.

[2.] Such as have a longish seed, swelling out in the middle, and larger than the former.

[3.] Such as have a shorter seed.

[4.] Such as have a tuberoso root.

[5.] Such as have a wrinkled, channelled or striated seed.

12. The stellate plants, which are so called, because their leaves grow on their stalks at certain intervals or distances in the form of a radiant star: their flowers are really monopetalous, divided into four segments, which look like so many petals; and each flower is succeeded by two seeds at the bottom of it.

13. The asperifolia, or rough leaved plants: they have their leaves placed alternately, or in no certain order on their stalks; they have a monopetalous flower cut or divided into five partitions, and after every flower there succeed usually four seeds.

14. The suffrutices, or verticillate plants: their leaves grow by pairs on their stalks, the leaf right against another; their leaf is monopetalous, and usually in form of an helmet.

15. Such as have naked seeds, more than four, succeeding their flowers, which therefore they call polyperma: plante femine nudo; by naked seeds, they mean such as are not included in any seed pod.

16. Baciferous plants, or such as bear berries.

17. Multifluous, or cor-niculate plants, or such as have, after each flower, many distinct, long, slender, and many times crooked cases or filiquæ, in which their seed is contained, and which, when they are ripe, open themselves and let the seeds drop out.

18. Such as have a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform, and after each flower a peculiar seed case containing the seed, and this often divided into many distinct cells.

19. Such as have a uniflora tetrapetalous flower, but bear their seeds in oblong filiquous cases.

20. Vasculariferous plants, with a tetrapetalous flower, but often anomalous.

21. Leguminous plants, or such as bear pulse, with a papilionaceous flower.

22. Vasculariferous plants with a pentapetalous flower; these have, besides the common calix, a peculiar case containing their seed, and their flower consisting of five leaves.

23. Plants with a true bulbous root, which consists but of one round ball or head, out of whose lower part go many fibres to keep it firm in the earth: the plants of this kind come up but with one leaf; they have no footstalk, and are long and slender: the seed vessels are divided into three partitions: their flower is sexapetalous.

24. Such as have their fruits approaching to a bulbous form: these emit, at first coming up, but one leaf, and in leaves, flowers and roots resemble the true bulbous plant.

25. Culmiferous plants, with a grassy leaf, are such as have a smooth hollow-jointed stalk, with one sharp-pointed leaf at each joint, encompassing the stalk, and set out without any footstalk: their seed is contained within a chaffy husk.

26. Plants with a grassy leaf, but not culmiferous, with an imperfect or staminate flower.

27. Plants whose place of growth is uncertain and various, chiefly water plants.

Butchers and villains,

How sweet a plant have you untimely crop'd. Shak.

Between the vegetable and sensitive province there are plant-animals and some kind of insects arising from vegetables, that seem to participate of both.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next species of life above the vegetable, is that of sense: wherewith some of those productions, which we call plant-animals, are endowed.

Grew.

It continues to be the same plant, as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, vitally united to the living plant, in a like continued organization, conformable to that sort of plants.

Locke.

Once I was skill'd in ev'ry herb that grew,
And every plant that drinks the morning dew. Pope.

Some plants the sun-shine ask, and some the shade,

At night the mure-èxes spread, but check their bloom

At morn, and lose their verdure and perfume. Harte.

2. A sapling.

A man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks. Shak.

Take a plant of stubborn oak,

And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryd.

3. [Planta, Latin.] The sole of the foot.

Ainsworth.

To PLANT, v. a. [planta, Latin; planter, French.]

1. The act or practice of planting.

2. The place planted.

As swine are to gardens and orderly plantations, so are tumult to parliaments. King Charles.

Some peasants
Of the same soil their nursery prepare,
With that of their plantation; lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

Whole rising forests, not for pride or show,
But future buildings, future navies grow:
Let his plantation stretch from down to down,
First shade a country, and then raise a town. Pope.

Virgil, with great modesty in his looks, was seated by Caliope in the midst of a plantation of laurel. Addison.

3. A colony.

Planting of countries is like planting of woods: the principal thing, that hath been the destruction of most plantations, hath been the haste and hasty drawing or profit in the first years, speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the plantation. Bacon's Essays.

Towns here are few either of the old or new plantations. Huylen.

4. Introduction; establishment.

Episcopacy must be cast out of this church, after possession here from the first plantation of christianity in this island. King Charles.

PLANTED, participle. [from plant.] This word seems in Shakespeare to signify, settled; well grounded.

PLOT.

PLOT. n. f. [plot, Saxon. See PLAT.]

1. A small extent of ground.

It was a chosen plot of fertile land,
Amongst wide waves set like a little nest,
As it had by nature's cunning hand
Been choicely picked out from all the rest. Spenser.
Plant ye with alders or willows a plot,
Where yearly a needful crop may be got. Tuff.
Thus liketh moory plots, delights in sedgy bowers. Drayton.

Many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villany. Shakespeare.
Were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcus, the yea dust would grind it,
And throw it against the wind. Shakespeare.

When we mean to build,
We first survey the plot, then draw the model,
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then we must rate the cost of the erection. Shakespeare.

Weeds grow not in the wild uncultivated waste, but in garden plots under the negligent hand of a gardener. Locke.

2. A plantation laid out.

Some goddess inhabiteth this region, who is the soul of this soil, for neither is any less than a goddess, worthy to be shrined in such a heap of pleasures, nor any less than a goddess, could have made it so perfect a plot. Sidney.

A form; a scheme; a plan.

The law of England never was properly applied unto the Irish nation, as by a purposed plot of government, but as they could insinuate and steal himself under the same by their humble carriage. Spenser on Ireland.

involved, and embarrassed; the story of a play, comprising an artful involution of affairs, unravelled at last by some unexpected means.

Nothing must be sung between the acts,
But what some way conduces to the plot. Roscom.

Our author
Produc'd his play, and begg'd the knight's advice,
Made him observe the subject and the plot,
The manners, passions, unties, what not? Pope.
They deny the plot to be tragical, because its catastrophe is a wedding, which hath ever been accounted comical. Gay.

If the plot or intrigue must be natural, and such as springs from the subject, then the winding up of the plot must be a probable consequence of all that went before. Pope.

6. Stratagem; artifice, in an ill sense.

Frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milton.

7. Contrivance; deep reach of thought.

Who says he was not

PLUMB n. f. [plomb, French; plumbum, Latin.] A plummet; a leaden weight
let down at the end of a line.

If the plumb line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is let flat down upon the work, the work is level. Moxon.

PLUMB. adv. [from the noun]

1. Perpendicularly to the horizon.

He meets
A vast vacuity, all unawares
Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb down he falls.
Milton.

If all these atoms should descend plumb down with equal velocity, being all perfectly solid and imporous, and the vacuum not resisting their motion, they would never the one overtake the other.

Ray.

It is used for any sudden descent, a plumb or perpendicular being the short passage of a falling body. It is sometimes pronounced ignorantly plump.

Is it not a sad thing to fall thus plumb into the grave? well one minute, and dead the next. Collins.

which depths are founded, and perpendicularity is discerned.

Deeper than did ever plummet found,
I'll drown my book. Shak. Lear's Temp. 4th.

2. Any weight.
God fees the body of flesh which you bear about you, and the plummet which it hangs upon your soul, and therefore, when you cannot rise high enough to him, he comes down to you. Duppa.

The heaviness of these bodies, being always in the ascending side of the wheel, must be counter-poised by a plummet fastened about the pulley on the axis: this plummet will descend according as the sand doth make the several parts of the wheel lighter or heavier. Wilkins.

The poet's eye in a fine frenzy rowling,
Doth glance from heav'n to earth, from earth to heav'n;

And, as imagination bodies forth
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen
Turns them to shape, and gives to ev'ry thing
A local habitation and a name. Shakespeare.

Our poet's ape, who would be thought the chief,
His works become the frippery of wit,
From brocade he is grown to hold a thief,
While we the robb'd despise, and pity it. Ben Jonf.
'Tis not vain or fabulous

What the sage poets, taught by the heavenly muse, Story'd of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles. Milton.

Ah! wretched we, poets of earth, but thou
Wert living the same poet that thou art now,
While angels sing to thee their aires divine,
And joy in an applause so great as thine. Cowley.

took with never so much rashness, his success shall vouch him a politician, and good luck shall pass for deep

deep contrivance; for give any one fortune, and he shall be thought a wife man. South.

POLITICK. adj. [πολιτικός.]

1. Political; civil. In this sense political is almost always used, except in the phrase body politic.

Virtuously and wisely acknowledging, that he with his people made all but one politic body, whereof himself was the head; even so cared for them as he would for his own limbs. Sidney.

No civil or politic constitutions have been more celebrated than his by the best authors. Temple.

2. Prudent; versed in affairs.

This land was famously enrich'd
With politic grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles. Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. Artful; cunning. In this sense political is not used.

I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady;
I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy. Shakespeare.

Authority followeth old men, and favour youth;
but for the moral part, perhaps youth will have it a prebendence, as age hath for the politic. Bacon.

No less alike the politic and wife
All fly slow things, with circumspective eyes;
Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,
Not that themselves are wise, but others weak. Pope.

POLITICKLY. adv. [from political.] Artfully; cunningly.

Thus have I politickly begun my reign,
And 'tis my hope to end successfully. Shakespeare.

He'll go and fowle the porter of Rome gates by th' ears; he will mow down all before him, and leave his passage poll'd. Shakespeare.

5. To plunder; to strip; to pill.
They will poll and spoil so outrageously, as the very enemy cannot do much worse. Spenser in Ireland.

Take and exact upon them the wild exactions, coignie, livery and forshon, by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants. Spenser on Ireland.
He told the people, that subsidies were not to be granted nor levied for wars in Scotland; for that the law had provided another course by service of escuage, much less when war was made but a pretence to poll and pill the people. Bacon.

the thumb cut off; it being once a practice of cowards to cut off their thumbs, that they might not be compelled to serve in war. Saumaize.

Ménage derives it from the Italian poltro, a-bed; as cowards feign themselves sick a-bed: others derive it from poletro or poltro, a young unbroken horse.] A coward; a nidget; a scoundrel.

Patience is for polltrons. Shakespeare.

They that are bruised with wood or fists,
And think one beating may for once
Suffice, are cowards and polltrons. Mudibras.

For who but a polltron posses'd with fear,
Such haughty insolence can tamely bear? Dryden.

wives than one at a time.

POLYGAMY. n. s. [polygamia, French;
πολυγαμία.] Plurality of wives.

Polygamy is the having more wives than one at once. Locke.

They

They allow no polygamy; they have ordained, that none do intermarry or contract, within a month, be past from their first interview.

He lived to his death in the sin of polygamy, without any particular repentance.

Christian religion, prohibiting polygamy, is more agreeable to the law of nature, that is, the law of God, than Mahometism that allows it; for one man, his having many wives by law, signifies nothing, unless there were many women to one man in nature also.

POLYGLOT. adj. [πολύγλωττος; polyglosse, French.] Having many languages.

The polyglot or linguist is a learned man.

Rome's pompas glories rising to our thought. Pope. An inscription in the ancient way, plain, pompous, yet modest, will be best.

POMPOUSLY. adv. [from pompous.] Magnificently; splendidly.

Whatever can urge ambitious youth to fight,
She pompously displays before their fight. Dryden.
P O M P O U S N E S S. n. f. [from pompous.] Magnificence; splendour; showiness;
ostentatiousness.

The English and French raise their language with metaphors, or by the pompousness of the whole phrase wear off any littleness that appears in the particular parts. Addison.

P O N D. n. f. [supposed to be the same with pound, pinban, Saxon, to shut up.] A small pool or lake of water;
a basin; water not running or emitting any stream.

In the midst of all the place was a fair pond, whose shaking crystal was a perfect mirror to all the other beauties, so that it bare shew of two gardens. Sidney.

Through bogs and mires, and oft through pond or pool,

There swallow'd up. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Had marine bodies been found in only one place, it might have been suspected, that the sea was, what the Cælian is, a great pond or lake, confined to one part. Woodward.

His building is a town,

His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.

P O N D. v. n. To ponder. A corrupt obsolete word.

O my liege lord, the god of my life,
Pleaseth you pond your suppliant's plaint. Spenser.

P O N D E R. v. a. [pondero, Latin.] To weigh mentally; to consider; to attend.

Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. Luke, ii. 19.

Colour, popularities, and circumstances sway the ordinary judgment, not fully pondering the matter. Bacon.

This ponder, that all nations of the earth shall in his seed be blessed. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Intent he seem'd,

And pond'ring future things of wondrous weight.
Dryden.

P O N D E R. v. n. To think; to muse; with an. This is an improper use of the word.

This tampest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more. Shak. King Lear.

Whom pond'ring thus on human miseries,
When Venus saw, her heav'nly fire bespoke. Dryd.

P O N D E R A L. adj. [from pondus, Latin.] Estimated by weight; distinguished from numeral.

Thus did the money drachma in process of time decrease; but all the while we may suppose the ponderal drachma to have continued the same, just as it has happened to us, as well as our neighbours, whose ponderal libra remains as it was, though the summary hath much decreased. Arbutnot.

P O N D E R A B L E. adj. [from pondera, Lat.] Capable to be weighed; mensurable by scales.

The bite of an asp will kill within an hour, yet the impression is scarce visible, and the poison communicated not ponderable. Brown.

P O N D E R A T I O N. n. f. [from pondero, Lat.]
The act of weighing.

While we perspire, we absorb the outward air, and the quantity of perspired matter, found by ponderation, is only the difference between that and the air imbibed. Arbutnot.

P O N D E R E R. n. f. [from ponder.] He who pondera.

P O N D E R O S I T Y. n. f. [from ponderous.]
Weight; gravity; heaviness.

Crystal will sink in water, as carrying in its bulk a greater ponderosity than the space in any other it doth occupy. Brown.

Gold is remarkable for its admirable ductility and ponderosity, wherein it excels all other bodies. Ray.

P O N D E R O U S. adj. [ponderosus, from pondus, Latin.]

1. Heavy; weighty.

It is more difficult to make gold, which is the most ponderous and material among metals, of other metals less ponderous and material, than via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver;
both which are more ponderous than silver. Bacon.

His pond'rous shield behind him cast. Milton.

Upon laying a weight in one of the scales, inscribed eternity, though I threw in that of time, prosperity, affliction, wealth, and poverty, which seemed very ponderous, they were not able to stir the opposite balance. Addison.

Because all the parts of an undistributed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed according to the difference of it, any concretion, that can be supposed to be naturally made in such a fluid, must be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley.

2. Important; momentous.

If your more ponderous and settled project

May suffer alteration, I'll point you

Where you shall have receiving shall become you.

Shakespeare.

3. forcible; strongly impulsive.

Imagination hath more force upon things living, than things inanimate; and upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous.
Bacon.

Impatient of her lead,

And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous god,
The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
With far superior force he press'd. Dryden.

Press'd with the pond'rous bow

Down sinks the ship within the abyss below. Dryd.

P O N D E R O U S L Y. adv. [from ponderous.]
With great weight.

P O N D E R O U S N E S S. n. f. [from ponderous.]
Heaviness; weight; gravity.

The oil and spirit place themselves under or above one another, according as their ponderousness makes them swim or sink. Boyle.

P O N D W E E D. n. f. [potamogeton.] A plant. Ainsworth.

P O N E N T. adj. [ponente, Ital.] Western.

Thwart of these, as fierce,
Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds Eurus and Zephyr. Milton's Paradise Lost.

P O N I A R D. n. f. [poignard, Fr. pugio, Latin.] A dagger; a short stabbing weapon.

She speaks p'wards, and every word stabs. Shak.

Melpomene would be represented, in her right hand a naked poniard. Peacocks on Drawing.

Poniard's hand to hand

Be banish'd from the field, that none shall dare
With short'ned sword to stab in cloister war. Dryden.

P O N I A R D. v. a. [poignardier, Fr.]
To stab with a poniard.

P O N K. n. f. [Of this word I know not the original.] A nocturnal spirit; a hag.

Ne let the ponk, nor other evil sprites,
Ne let mischievous witches. Spenser.

P O N T A G E. n. f. [pons, pontis, bridge.]
Duty paid for the reparation of bridges.

In right of the church, they were formerly by the common law discharged from pontage and mutage. Ayliffe.

P O N T I F F. n. f. [pontife, French; ponti-fex, Latin.]

1. A priest; a high-priest.

Livy relates, that there were found two coffins, whereof the one contained the body of Numa, and the other his books of ceremonies, and the discipline of the pontiffs. Bacon.

2. The pope.

P O N T I F I C A L. adj. [pontifical, Fr. pontificalis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to an high-priest.

2. Popish.

It were not amiss to answer by a herald the next pontifical attempt, rather sending defiance than publicly answering. Raleigh.

The pontifical authority is as much superior to the regal, as the sun is greater than the moon.

3. Splendid; magnificent.

Thus did I keep my person fresh and new,
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

4. [From pons and facio.] Bridge-building. This sense is, I believe, peculiar to Milton, and perhaps was intended as an equivocal satire on popery.

Now had they brought the work by wond'rous art
Pontifical, a hedge of pendent rock

Over the ver'd abyss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

P O N T I F I C A L. n. f. [pontificalis, Latin.]
A book containing rites and ceremonies ecclesiastical.

What the Greek and Latin churches did, may be seen in pontificals, containing the forms for con-secrations. Smith.

By the pontifical, no altar is to be consecrated without reliques. Stillingfleet.

P O N T I F I C A L L Y. adv. [from pontifical.]
In a pontifical manner.

P O N T I F I C A T E. n. f. [pontifical, French; pontificatus, Lat.] Papacy; popedom.

He turned hermit in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison.

Painting, sculpture, and architecture may all recover themselves under the present pontificate, if the wars of Italy will give them leave. Addison.

P O N T I F I C E. n. f. [pons and facio.]
Bridgework; edifice of a bridge.

He, at the brink of Chaos, near the foot
Of this new wond'rous pontiff, unhop'd

Met his offspring dear. Milton's Paradise Lost.

P O N T I F I C I A N. adj. [from pontiff.] Adhering to the pope; popish.

Many other doctors, both pontificians and of the reformed church, maintain, that God sanctified the seventh day. White.

P O N T I L E V I S. n. f. In horsemanship, is a disorderly resisting action of a horse in disobedience to his rider, in which he rears up several times running, and rises up so upon his hind-legs, that he is in danger of coming over. Bailey.

P O N T O N. n. f. [French.]

Pontoon is a floating bridge or invention to pass over water: it is made of two great boats placed at some distance from one another, both planked over, as is the interval between them, with rails on their sides; the whole so strongly built as to carry over horse and cannon. Military Dict.

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontons. Spectator.

P O N Y. n. f. [I know not the original of this word, unless it be corrupted from pony.] A small horse.

P O O L. n. f. [pul, Saxon; pool, Dutch.]
A lake of standing water.

Moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, and not stand in a pool. Bacon.

Sea he had search'd, and land,
From Eden over Pontus, and the pool

Mæotis. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Love oft to virtuous acts inflames the mind,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And brushing o'er, adds vigour to the pool. Dryden.

The circling streams, once thought the pools of blood,

From dark oblivion Harvey's name shall save. Dryd.

After the deluge, we suppose the valleys and lower grounds, where the descent and derivation of the water

water was not so easy, to have been full of fishes and pois.

POOP. n. f. [pooppe, French; puppis, Latin.] The hindmost part of the ship.

Some sat upon the top of the poop weeping and wailing, till the sea swallowed them. Sidney.
The poop was beaten gold. Shakespeare.

Perceiving that the pigeon had only lost a piece of her tail through the next opening of the rocks, they passed safe, only the end of their poop was bruised. Raleigh.
He was openly set upon the poop of the galley.
Knolles.

With wind in poop the vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dry.
POOR. adj. [paupere, French; poore, Spanish.]

1. Not rich; indigent; necessitous; oppressed with want.
Poor ruckoldly knave—I wrong him to call him poor; they say he hath masses of money. Shakespeare.
Who builds a church to God and not to fame,
Will never mark the marble with his name;
Go search it there, where to be born and die,
Of rich and poor makes all the history. Pope.
Teach the old chronicle, in future times,
To bear no memory but of poor rogues crimes. Harte.

2. Trifling; narrow; of little dignity, force, or value.
A conservatory of snow and ice used for delicacy to cool wine, is a poor and contemptible use, in respect of other uses that may be made of it. Bacon.
How poor are the imitations of nature in common course of experiments, except they be led by great judgment. Bacon.
When he delights in sin, as he observes it in other men, he is wholly transformed from the creature God first made him: nay, has consumed those poor remains of good that the sin of Adam left him. South.
That I have wronged no man, will be a poor plea or apology at the last day; for it is not for rapine, that men are formally impeached and finally condemned; but I was an hungry, and ye gave me no meat. Calamy's Sermons.
3. Paltry; mean; contemptible.
A poor number it was to conquer Ireland to the Pope's use. Bacon.
And if that wisdom still wise ends propound,
Why made he man, of other creatures, king;
When, if he perish here, there is not found
In all the world so poor and vile a thing? Davies.
The marquis, making haste to Scarborough, embarked in a poor vessel. Clarendon.
We have seen how poor and contemptible a force has been raised by those who appeared openly.
Addison's Freeholder.
Matilda is so intent upon all the arts of improving their dress, that she has some new fancy almost every day; and leaves no ornament untry'd, from the richest jewel to the poorest flower. Lutw.

4. Unimportant.
To be without power or distinction, is not, in my poor opinion, a very amiable situation to a person of title. Swift.

5. Unhappy; uneasy; pitiable.
Vext fallors curse the rain,
For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain. Waller.
Vain privilege, poor women have a tongue;
Men can stand silent, and resolve on wrong. Dryd.
6. Mean; depressed; low; dejected.
A footstayer made Antonius believe, that his genius, which otherwise was brave, was, in the presence of Octavianus, poor and cowardly. Bacon.

7. [A word of tenderness.] Dear.
Poor, little, pretty, flurr'ring thing,
Must we no longer live together?
And dost thou prune thy trembling wing,
To take thy flight thou know'st not whither? Prior.

8. [A word of slight contempt.] Wretched.
The poor monk never saw many of the decrees and councils he had occasion to use. Baker.

9. Not good; not fit for any purpose.

I have very poor and unhappy brains for drinking; I could with courtesy would invent some other entertainment. Shakespeare.

10. The Poor. [collectively.] Those who are in the lowest rank of the community; those who cannot subsist but by the charity of others; but it is sometimes used with laxity for any not rich.

From a confin'd well-manag'd store,
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.
Never any time since the reformation can show so many poor amongst the widows and orphans of churches, as this particular time. Sparr.
The poor dare nothing tell but flattering news.
Dryden.

Has God cast thy lot amongst the poor of this world, by denying thee the pleasures of this life, or by taking them away? this may be preventing mercy;
for much mischievous riches do to the sons of men.
South.

11. Barren; dry: as, a poor soil.
12. Lean; starved; emaciated: as, a poor horse.

Where juice wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, and scarce covering the bone.
Ben Jonson.

13. Without spirit; flaccid.
POORLY. adv. [from poor]

1. Without wealth.
Those thieves spared his life, letting him go to learn to live poorly. Sidney.

2. Not prosperously; with little success.
If you sow one ground with the same kind of grain, it will prosper but poorly. Bacon.

3. Meanly; without spirit.
Your constancy
Hath left you unattended: be not left
So poorly in your thoughts. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Nor is their courage or their wealth so low,
That from his wars they poorly would retire. Dryd.

4. Without dignity.
You meaner beauties of the night,
That poorly satisfy our eyes,
More by your number than your light,
You common people of the skies;
What are you when the sun shall rise? Wotton.

POORJOHN. n. f. [callariu]. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

POORNESS. n. f. [from poor].
1. Poverty; indigence; want.

No less I hate him than the gates of hell,
That poorness can force an untruth to tell. Chapm.
If a prince should complain of the poorness of his exchequer, would he be angry with his merchants, if they brought him a cargo of good bullion? Burnet's Theory.

2. Meanness; lowness; want of dignity.
The Italian opera seldom sinks into a poorness of language, but, amidst all the meanness of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison.
There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.

3. Sterility; barrenness.
The poorness of the herbs shows the poorness of the earth, especially if in colour more dark. Bacon.
Enquire the differences of metals which contain other metals, and how that agrees with the poorness or richness of the metals in themselves. Bacon.

POORSPIRITED. adj. [from poor and spirit].
Mean; cowardly.
Mirvan! poorspirited wretch! thou hast deceiv'd me. Dennis.

POORSPIRITEDNESS. n. f. Meanness; cowardice.

A cause of men's taking pleasure in the sins of others, is, from that meanness and poorspiritedness that accompanies guilt. South.

POP. n. f. [poppy, Latin.] A small smart quick sound. It is formed from the sound.

I have several ladies, who could not give a pop loud enough to be heard at the farther end of the room, who can now discharge a gun, that it shall make a report like a pocket-pistol. Addison.

TO POP. v. n. [from the noun.] To move or enter with a quick, sudden, and unexpected motion.

He that kill'd my king,
Pops in between th' election and my hopes. Shak.
A boat was sunk and all the folk drowned, saving one only woman, that in her first popping up again, which most living things accustom, tipped the boat risen likewise, and floating by her, got hold of the boat, and sat astride upon one of its sides. Carver.

I startled at his popping upon me unexpectedly.
Addison.

As he scratch'd to fetch up thought,
Forth popp'd the sprite to him. Swift's Miscellanies.
Others have a trick of popping up and down every moment, from their paper to the audience, like an idle school-boy. Swift.

TO POP. v. a.

1. To put out or in suddenly, sily, or unexpectedly.

That is my brother's plea,
The which if he can rove, he pops me out
At least from fair five hundred pound a year. Shak.
He popp'd a paper into his hand. Milton.
A fellow, finding somewhat prick him, popp'd his finger upon the place. L'Estrange.

The commonwealth popp'd up its head for the third time under Brutus and Cassius, and then sunk for ever. Dryden.

Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Price.

2. To shift.
If their curiosity leads them to ask what they should not know, it is better to tell them plainly, that it is a thing that belongs not to them to know,
than to pop them off with a falsehood. Locke.

POPE. n. f. [papa, Latin; padamas.]

1. The bishop of Rome.
I refuse you for my judge; and Appeal unto the pope to be judged by him. Shakespeare.
He was organist in the pope's chapel at Rome. Peacham.

Christianity has been more oppressed by those that thus fought for it, than those that were in arms against it; upon this score, the pope has done her more harm than the Turk. Ducy's Piety.

2. A small fish.

A pope, by some called a ruffe, is much like a pearl for shape, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon: an excellent fish, of a pleasant taste;
and spawns in April. Watson.

PO'PEDOM. n. f. [pope and dom.] Papacy; papal dignity.

That world of wealth I've drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom. Shakespeare.

PO'PERY. n. f. [from pope.] The religion of the church of Rome.

Papery, for corruptions in doctrine and discipline, I look upon to be the most absurd system of Christianity. Swift.

PO'PESEYE. n. f. [pope and eye.] The glad surrounded with fat in the middle of the thigh: why so called I know not.

PO'PGUN. n. f. [pop and gun.] A gun with which children play; that only makes a noise.

Life is not weak enough to be destroyed by the popgun artillery of tea and coffee. Carver.

POPINJAY. n. f. [paggay, Dutch; papa-gaya, Spanish.]

1. A parrot.
Young popinjays learn quickly to speak. Addison.
The great red and blue parrot; there are of this. Y y 2

these greater, the middlemost called popinjays, and the lesser called perroquets. Greiv.

2. A woodpecker. So it seems to be used here.

Terpsichore would be expressed, upon her head a coronet of those green feathers of the popinjay, in token of that victory which the muses got of the daughters of Pierus, who were turned into popinjays or woodpeckers. Peacbam.

3. A trifling fop.

I, all smarting with my wounds, being gall'd To be so jest'd by a popinjay, Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what. Shakspeare.

PO'PISH. adj. [from pope.] Taught by the pope; relating to popery; peculiar to popery.

In this sense as they affirm, so we deny, that whatsoever is popish we ought to abrogate. Hooker.

I know thou art religious,

With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies. Shakspeare.

PO'PISHLY. adv. [from popish.] With tendency to popery; in a popish manner.

She baffled the many attempts of her enemies, and entirely broke the whole force of that party among her subjects, which was popishly affected. Addison's Br. chadler.

A friend in Ireland, popishly speaking, I believe constantly well disposed towards me. Pope to Swift.

PO'PLAR. n. f. [peuplier, French; populus, Latin.] A tree.

The leaves of the poplar are broad, and for the most part angular: the male trees produce amentaceous flowers, which have many little leaves and spikes, but are barren: the female trees produce membranaceous pods, which open into two parts, containing many seeds, which have a large quantity of down adhering to them, and are collected into spikes. Milkr.

Po is drawn with the face of an ox, with a garland of poplar upon his head. Peacbam.

All he deserv'd was present to their eyes, And as he said his verse, the poplar seem'd to rise. Rowfcommon.

So falls a poplar, that in watry ground Rais'd high the head. Pope's Hud.

PO'PPY. n. f. [popix, Saxon; papaver, Latin.] A flower.

Of these are eighteen species: some sort is cultivated for medicinal use, and some suppose it to be the plant whence opium is produced. Milkr.

His temples last with poppies were o'erspread,

That nodding seem'd to consecrate his head. Dryden.

Dr. Lister has been guilty of mistake, in the reflections he makes on what he calls the sleeping Cupid with poppy in his hands. Addison.

And pale Nymphs with her clay-cold breath, And poppy which tuborn the sleep of death. Harc.

PO'PULACE. n. f. [populace, French, from populus, Latin.] The vulgar; the multitude.

Now swarms the populace, a countless throng, Youth and hoar age tumultuous pour along. Pope.

The tribunes and people, having subdued all competitors, began the last game of a prevalent populace, to chafe themselves a matter. Swift.

PO'PULACY. n. f. [populace, French.]

The common people, the multitude

Under colours of pety ambitious policies march, not only with acuity, but applause as to the populacy. King Charles.

When he think, a monarch's lust too mild a regiment, he can lead the whole populacy of sin upon the foul. Darby of Eton.

POPULAR. adj. [populaire, French; popularis, Latin.]

1. Vulgar; plebeian.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

The emmet join'd in her popular tubes

Monarchy. Milton.

So the popular vote inclin'd.

2. Suitable to the common people; familiar; not critical.

Honillies are plain and popular instructions. Hooker.

3. Beloved by the people; pleasing to the people.

It might have been more popular and plausible to vulgar ears, if this first discourse had been spent in extolling the force of laws. Hooker.

Such as were popular,

And well deserving, were advanced by grace. Daniel.

The old general was set aside, and prince Rupert put into the command, which was no popular change. Clarendon.

4. Studious of the favour of the people.

A popular man is, in truth, no better than a prostitute to common fame and to the people. Dry.

His virtues have undone his country,

Such popular humanity is treason. Addison's Cato.

5. Prevailing or raging among the populace: as, a popular distemper.

POPULARITY. n. f. [popularitas, Lat. popularité, French; from popular.]

1. Graciousness among the people; state of being favoured by the people.

The best temper of mind desireth good name and true honour; the highest, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny. Bacon.

Your mind has been above the wretched affection of popularity. Dryden.

Admire we then,

Or popularity, or stars, or strings,

The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings? Pope.

He could be at the head of no factions and cabals, nor attended by a hired rabble, which his flatterers might represent as popularity. Swift.

2. Representation suited to vulgar conception; what affects the vulgar.

The persuader's labour is to make things appear good or evil, which as it may be performed by solid reasons, so it may be represented also by colours, popularities, and circumstances which sway the ordinary judgment. Bacon.

PO'PULARLY. adv. [from popular.]

1. In a popular manner; so as to please the crowd.

The victor knight,

Barchaded, popular bow had bow'd, And paid the tribute to the crowd. Dryden.

Influenced by the rabble's bloody will,

With thumbs bent back, they popularly kill. Dryden.

2. According to vulgar conception.

Nor can we excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow those commendatory conceits, which popularly set forth the eminency thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To POPULATE. v. n. [from populus, Latin.] To breed people.

When there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate, without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity, that once in an age they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations. Bacon's Essays.

POPULATION. n. f. [from populate.]

The state of a country with respect to numbers of people.

The population of a kingdom does not exceed the stock of the kingdom, which should maintain them, neither is the population to be reckoned only by number: for a smaller number, that spend more and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number, that live lower and gather more. Bacon.

POPULOSITY. n. f. [from populous.]

Populosity; multitude of people.

Now it conduceth unto populosity, we shall make but little doubt; there are causes of numerosity in any species. Brown.

POPULOUS. adj. [populosus, Latin.]

Full of people; numerously inhabited.

A wilderness is populous enough.

So Suffolk had thy heavenly company. Shakspeare.

For the greater part have kept

Their station; heav'n, yet populous, retains

Number sufficient to possess her realms. Milton.

POPULOUSLY. adv. [from populous.]

With much people.

POPULOUSNESS. n. f. [from populous.]

The state of abounding with people.

This will be allowed by any that considers the vastness, the opulence, the populousness of this region, with the ease and facility wherewith 'tis governed. Temple's Miscellanies.

PORCELAIN. n. f. [porcelaine, French; said to be derived from pour cent années; because it was believed by Europeans, that the materials of porcelain were matured under ground one hundred years.]

1. China; china ware; fine dishes, of a middle nature between earth and glass, and therefore semi pellucid.

We have burials in several earths, where we put divers cements, as the Chinese do their porcelain. Bacon.

We are not thoroughly resolved concerning porcelain or china dishes; that according to common belief, they are made of earth, which lieth in preparation about a hundred years under ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The fine materials made it weak,

Porcelain, by being pure, is apt to break. Dryden.

These look like the workmanship of heav'n:

This is the porcelain clay of human kind,

And therefore cast into these noble moulds. Dryden.

2. [Portulaca, Latin.] An herb. Ainw.

PORCH. n. f. [porche, French; porticus, Latin.]

1. A roof supported by pillars before a door; an entrance.

Flud went forth through the porch, and shut the doors of the parlour. Judges, iii. 23.

Not infants in the porch of life were free,

The sick, the old, that could but hope a day

Longer by nature's bounty, not let stay. Ben Jon.

2. A portico; a covered walk.

All this done,

Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us. Shakspeare.

PORCUPINE. n. f. [porc espi, or epic, French; porcupino, Italian.]

The porcupine, when full grown, is as large as a moderate pig: there is no other difference between the porcupine of Malacca and that of Europe, but that the former grows to a larger size. Hill.

This stubborn Cade

Fought so long, till that his thighs with darts Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine. Shakspeare.

Long bearded comets flick,

Like flaming porcupines, to their left sides,

As they would shoot their quills into their hearts. Dryden.

By the black prince of Monomotapa's side were the glaring cat-a-mountain and the quill-dating porcupine. Arbutnot and Pope.

PORE. n. f. [por, French; porus, Latin.]

1. Spiracle of the skin; passage of perspiration.

Witches carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, by ointments, and anointing themselves all over, may justly move a man to think, that these fables are the effects of imagination; for it is certain, that ointments do all, if laid on anything thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and lend them to the head extremely. Bacon.

Why was the fight

To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd, So obvious and so easy to be quenched?

And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore?
Milton.

2. Any narrow spiracle or passage.

Pores are small interstices between the particles of matter which constitute every body, or between certain aggregates or combinations of them. Quincy.

From veins of vailies milk and nectar broke,
And honey sweating through the pores of oak. Dry.

To PORE. v. n. [poro, is the optick nerve; but I imagine pore to come by corruption from some English word.] To look with great intention and care, to examine with great attention

All delights are vain; but that most vain,
Which with pain purchas'd, doth inherent pain;
As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth, while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight. Shakespeare.

A book was writ, call'd Tetraichodon,
The subject new: it walk'd the town a while Numb'ring good intellects; now seldom por'd on.
Milton.

The eye grows weary, with poring perpetually on the same thing. Dryden's Dunciad.

Let him with pedants hunt for words in books,
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gnomes,
Grow old and vainly proud in fancy'd knowledge.
Rowe.

With shurpen'd sight pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope

He hath been poring so long upon Fox's Martyrs, that he imagines himself living in the reign of queen Mary. Swift.

The design is to avoid the imputation of pedantry, to shew that they understand men and manners, and have not been poring upon old unfashionable books. Swift.

PO'RRIND adj. [commonly spoken and written purblind.] Nearighted; short-sighted.

Purblind men see best in the dimmer light, and likewise have their sight stronger near at hand, than those that are not porblind, and can read and write smaller letters; for that the spirits visual in those that are porblind are thinner and rarer than in others, and therefore the greater light disperseth them. Bacon's Natural History.

PO'RINESS. n. f. [from poro.] Fulness of pores.

I took off the dressings, and set the nipple above the fractured bone, considering the poriness of the bone below. Wise.

PORISTICK method. n. f. [poristikos.] In mathematicks, is that which determines when, by what means, and how many different ways, a problem may be solved. Di.

PORK. n. f. [porc, French; porcus, Lat.] Swine flesh untalted.

You are no good member of the commonwealth; for, in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork. Shakespeare.

All flesh full of nourishment, as beef and pork, increase the matter of phlegm. Plac on the Hum.

PO'RKER. n. f. [from pork.] A hog; a pig.

Strait to the lodgments of his herd he run,
Where the fat porckers slept beneath the sun. Pope.

PO'RKEATER. n. f. [pork and eater.] One who feeds on pork.

This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs; if we grow all to be porkeaters, we shall not shortly have a rather on the coals for money. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

PO'RKET. n. f. [from pork.] A young hog.

A priest appears,
And off'ring to the flaming altars bears;
A porcket, and a lamb that never suffer'd shears.
Dryden.

PO'RKLING. n. f. [from pork.] A young pig.

A hovel

Will serve thee in winter, moreover than that,
To shut up thy porckings, thou meanest to fat. Tupper.

POROSITY. n. f. [from porous.] Quality of having pores.

This is a good experiment for the disclosure of the nature of colours; which of them require a finer porosity, and which a grosser. Bacon.

PO'ROUS. adj. [porous, French; from pore] Having small spiracles or passages.

Vultures and dogges have tornæ from every limb
His porous skin, and forth his soul is fled. Chapm.

The rapid current, which through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Runs a fifth fountain, and with many a rill Water'd the garden. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Of light the greater part he took, and, plac'd
In the sun's orb, made porous to receive And drink the liquid light; firm to retain
Her gather'd beams; great palace now of light.
Milton.

PO'ROUSNESS. n. f. [from porous.] The quality of having pores; the porous part.

They will forcibly get into the porousness of it, and pass between part and part, and separate the parts of that thing one from another; as a knife doth a solid substance, by having its thinnest parts pressed into it. Digby on Bodies.

PO'RPHYRE. } n. f. [from porphyra; por-
PO'RPHYRY. } phyrites, Lat. porphyre, Fr.] Marble of a particular kind.

I like best the porphyry, white or green marble, with a mullar or upper stone of the same. Peacocks.

Consider the red and white colours in porphyre; hinder light but from striking on it, its colours vanish, and produce no such ideas in us, but upon the return of light, it produces these appearances again. Locke.

PO'RPOISE. } n. f. [porc poisson, French.]
PO'RPU. } The sea-hog.

And wallowing porpus sport and lord it in the flood. Dryden.

Amphibious animals link the terrestrial and aquatic together, seals live at land and at sea, and porpoises have the warm blood and entrails of a hog. Locke.

Parch'd with unextinguish'd thirst,
Small beer I guzzle till I burst;
And then I drag a bloated corpus Swell'd with a drop like a porpus. Swift.

PORRACEOUS. adj. [porraceus, Latin; porrace, French.] Greenish.

If the lesser intestines be wounded, he will be troubled with porraceous vomiting. Wise's Surg.

PO'RRET. n. f. [porrum, Latin.] A scallion.

It is not an easy problem to resolve why garlic, moly and porrets have white roots, deep green leaves and black seeds. Brown.

PO'RRI. n. f. [more properly porrage; porrata, low Latin, from porrum, a leek.] Food made by boiling meat in water; broth.

I had as lief you should tell me of a mess of porridge. Shakespeare.

PO'RRI. n. f. [porridge and pot.]

The pot in which meat is boiled for a family.

PO'RRI. n. f. [from porridge.]

1. A vessel in which broth is eaten.

A small wax candle put in a socket of brass, then set upright in a porring, full of spirit of wine, then set both the candle and spirit of wine on fire, and you shall see the flame of the candle become four times bigger than otherwise, and appear globular. Bacon.

A physician undertakes a woman with sore eyes, who dawbs 'em quite up with ointment, and, while she was in that pickle, carries off a porringer. L'Eph.

The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glittering show,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

2. It seems in Shakespeare's time to have been a word of contempt for a head-dress; of which perhaps the first of these passages may shew the reason.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.—
—Why this was moulded on a porringer. Shakespeare.

A haberdasher's wife of small wit rail'd upon me, till her pink'd porringer tell off her head. Shak.

PORRECTION. n. f. [porrectio, Latin.]

The act of teaching forth.

POR. n. f. [port, French; portus, Lat.]

1. A harbour, a safe station for ships.

Her small gondelay her port did make,
And that gay pair, sitting on the shore,

I should be still Peering in maps for ports, and ways and roads. Shak.

The earl of Newcastle seized upon that town; when there was not one port town in England, that avowed their obedience to the king. Clarendon.

A weather beaten vessel holds Gladly the port. Milton.

2. [Porta, Latin; portæ, Saxon; ports, French.] A gate.

Shew all thy praises within the ports of the daughters of Sion. Psalms ix. 14.

He I accuse,
The city ports by this hath enter'd. Shakespeare.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keep it the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night; sleep with it now!
Yet not so found, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely bidden bound,
Snore out the watch of night. Shak. Henry IV.

The mind of man hath two ports; the one always frequented by the entrance of manifold vanities, the other declare and overgrown with grails, by which enter our charitable thoughts and divine contemplations. Raleigh.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issued. Milton.

3. The aperture in a ship, at which the gun is put out.

At Portsmouth the Mary Rose, by a little sway of the ship in casting about, her ports being within sixteen inches of the water, was overset and lost. Raleigh.

The lustre's touch, the pond'rous ball expires,
The vigorous teaman every port-hole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he treads. Dryd.

4. [Porte, Fr.] Carriage; air; mien; manner; bearing; external appearance; demeanour.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graced,
Whiles her fair face she rears up to the sky,
And so the ground her eyelids low embraceth,
Most goodly temperance ye may descry. Spenser.

Think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentleman? Shak.

See Godfrey there in purple clad and gold,
His stately port and princely look behold. Shak.

Their port was more than human, as they stood;
I took it for a tiny vision.

Of some gay creatures of the element,
That in the colours of the rainbow live. Milton.

Now lay the line, and measure all thy count,
By inward virtue, not external port,
And find whom justly to prefer above
The man on whom my judgment plac'd my love. Dryden.

A proud man is so far from making himself great by his haughty and contemptuous port, that he is usually punished with neglect for it. Collier.

Thy plummy crest
Nods horrible, with more terrific port
Thou walk'st, and seem'st already in the fight. Elphinstone.

PORT. v. a. [porto, Latin; porter, Fr.]
To carry in form.

Th' angelick squadron bright
Turn'd fiery red, sharp'ning in mooned horns
Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
With ported spears. Milton's Paradise Lost.

PORTABLE. adj. [portabilis, Latin.]

1. Manageable by the hand.

2. Such as may be born along with one.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming the eye or envy of the world. South.

3. Such as is transported or carried from one place to another.

Most other portable commodities decay quickly in their use; but money is by slower degrees removed from, or brought into the free commerce of any country, than the greatest part of other merchandise. Locke.

4. Sufferable; supportable.

How light and portable my pains seem now,
When that which makes me bend, makes the king bow. Shakespeare.

All these are portable

With other graces weigh'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

PORTABLENESS. n. f. [from portable.]

The quality of being portable.

PORTAGE. n. f. [portage, French.]

1. The price of carriage.

He had reason to do, gaining thereby the charge of portage. Fell.

2. [From port.] Porthole.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon. Shakespeare's Henry V.

PORTAL. n. f. [portail, French; portella, Italian.] A gate; the arch under which the gate opens.

King Richard doth appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun,
From out the fiery portal of the east. Shakespeare.

Though I should run

To those disclosing portals of the sun;
And walk his way, until his horses steep
Then fiery locks in the Iberian deep. Sandys.

He through heav'n,

That open'd wide her blazing portals, led
To God's eternal house, duct the way. Milton.

That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance born of heavenly birth. Spenser.

Your loves,

Thinking upon his service, took from you
The apprehension of his present portance,
Which gibingly, ungravelly, he did fashion. Shak.

PORTALS. n. f. [sometimes called portuis; and by Chaucer, porthoſe.] A breviary; a prayer book.

In his hand his portesse still he bare,
That much was worn, but therein little red;
For of devotion he had little care. Spenser.

An old priest always read in his portals mump-fimus doctrine for sumptuous; wherout when he was admonished, he said that he saw had not mumpfimus thirty years, and would not leave his old mumpfimus for the new sumptuous. Camden.

PORTCULLIS. n. f. [portecoulisse, Fr.]

PORTCULUSE. n. f. [quasi porta clausa.] A sort of machine like a harrow, hurg over the gates of a city, to be let down to keep out an enemy.

Over it a fair portcullis hong,
Which to the gate directly did incline,

With comely compass and compacture strong,
Neither unmetely short, nor yet exceeding long.

Spenser.

The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Hayward.

She the huge portcullis high up drew,
Which but herself, not all the Stygian powers
Cou'd once have mov'd. Milton.

Pyrrhus comes, neither men nor walls
His force sustain, the torn portcullis falls. Denham.
The upper eyelid claps down, and is as good a fence as a portcullis against the importunity of the enemy. Mora.

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn;
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in. Dryden.

PORTCULLIS. v. a. [from the noun.]

To bar; to shut up.

Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shak.

TO PORTEND. v. a. [portendo, Latin]

To foretoken; to foreshow as omens.
As many as remained, he earnestly exhorteth to prevent portended calamities. Hooker.

Doth this churchly superscription
Portend some alteration in good will? Shakespeare.
A moist and a cool summer portendeth a hard winter. Bacon.

True opener to mine eyes,
Much better seems this vision, and more hope
Of peaceful days portend, than those two past. Milt.
True poets are the guardians of a state,
And when they fail, portend approaching fate. Johnson.

The ruin of the state is the destruction of the church, is not only portended as its sign, but also intimated from it as its cause. South.

PORTENSION. n. f. [from portend.] The act of foretokening. Not in use.

Although the red comets do carry the portensions of Mars, the brightly white should be of the influence of Venus. Braddon.

PORTENT. n. f. [portentum, Latin.]

Omen of ill; prodigy foretokening misery.

O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
My lots by dire portents the god foretold;
Yon riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.

PORTENTOUS. adj. [portentus, Latin; from portent.]

1. Foretokening ill; ominous.

They are portentous things
Unto the climate that they point at. Shakespeare.
This portentous figure
Comes armed through our watch so like the king
That was. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Every unwanted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glanville.

2. Monstrous; prodigious; wonderful.

In an ill sense.

Overlay

With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.
No beast of more portentous size
In the Hebrinian forest lies. Johnson.

Let us look upon them as so many prodigious exceptions from our common nature, as so many portentous animals, like the strange unnatural productions of Africa. South.

The pericoot will shrink at your first coming to town; at least a touch of your pen will make it contract itself, and by that means oblige several who are terrified or astonished at this portentous novelty. Addison.

PORTER. n. f. [portier, French; from porta, Latin, a gate.]

1. One that has the charge of the gate.

Porter, remember what I give in charge,
And, when you've so done, bring the keys to me. Shakespeare.

Arry all my household presently, and charge
The porter he let no man in till day. Ben Jonson.

Nic. Frog demanded to be his porter, and his fishmonger, to keep the keys of his gates, and furnish the kitchen. Arbutnot.

2. One who waits at the door to receive messages.

A favourite porter with his master vie,
Be brib'd as often, and as often lie. Pope.

3. [Porteur, French; from porto, Latin, to carry.] One who carries burthens for hire.

It is with kings sometimes as with porters, whose packs may jostle one against the other, yet remain good friends still. Hewel.

By porter, who can tell whether I mean a man who bears burthens, or a servant who waits at a gate? Watts.

PORTERAGE. n. f. [from porter.] Money paid for carriage.

PORTESSE. n. f. A breviary. See PORTASSA.

PORTGLAVE. n. f. [porter and glave, French and Erse.] A sword-bearer. Ainsworth.

PORTGRAVE. n. f. [porta, Latin; and PORTGREVE. n. f. [grave, Teutonic, a keeper.] The keeper of a gate. Obf.

PORTHOLES. n. f. [from port and bale.] Holes cut like windows in a ship's sides where the guns are placed.

PORTICO. n. f. [porticus, Lat. portico, Italian; portique, French.] A covered walk; a piazza.

The rich their wealth bestow

On some expensive airy portico;
Where safe from showers they may be born in fate,
And free from tempests for fair weather wait. Dryd.

PORTION. n. f. [portion, Fr. portio, Latin.]

1. A part.

These are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard of him? Job, xxvi. 14.
Like favour find the Irish, with like fate
Advanc'd to be a portion of our state. Waller.

In battles won, fortune's part did claim,
And soldiers have their portion in the fame. Waller.

Those great portions of the world fell into the abyss; some in one posture, some in another. Burnet.

Pirithous no small portion of Pres'd on, and shook his lance. Dryden.

2. A part assigned; an allotment; a dividend.

Here's their pris'n ordain'd and portion set. Milt.
Shou'd you no honey vow to taste,
Put what the master bees have plac'd
In compass of their cells, how small
A portion to your share would fall! Waller.

Of words they seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless they are born with a poetical genius, which is a rare portion amongst them. Dryden.

As soon as any good appears to make a part of their portion of happiness, they begin to desire it. Locke.

When he considers the temptations of poverty and riches, and how fatally it will affect his happiness to be overcome by them, he will join with Agur in petitioning God for the safer portion of a moderate convenience. Rogers.

One or two faults are easily to be remedied with a very small portion of abilities. Swift.

3. Part of an inheritance given to a child; a fortune.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

4. A wife's fortune.

TO PORTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divide; to parcel.

The gods who portion out
The lots of princes as of private men,
Have put a bar between his hopes and empire. Rowe.
Argos the feat of sovereign rule & choice,
Where my Ulysses and his race might reign,
And portion to his tribes the wide domain. Pope.

2. To endow with a fortune.
Him portion'd maids, apprentic'd orphans blest,
The young who labour, and the old who rest. Pope.

PORTIONER. n. s. [from portion.] One that divides.

PORTLINESS. n. s. [from portly.] Dignity of mien; grandeur of demeanour.
Such pride his praise, such portliness his honour,
That boldness innocence bears in her eyes;
And her fair countenance like a goodly banner Spreads in defiance of all enemies. Spenser.
When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, fulness with fineness, seemliness with port- liness, and curtness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than most full of sweetness? Camden's Remains.

PORTLY. adj. [from port.]

1. Grand of mien.
Rudely thou wrong'st my dear heart's desire,
In finding fault with her too portly pride. Spenser.
Your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Or as it were the pageants of the sea,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakespeare.
A goodly, portly man and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage. Shakespeare.
A portly prince, and goodly to the fight,
He seem'd a son of Anak for his height. Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling.
Our house little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness too, which our own hands
Have help'd to make so portly. Shakespeare.

PORTMAN. n. s. [from port and man.] An inhabitant or burgher, as those of the cinque ports. Dict.

PORTMANTEAU. n. s. [from portmanteau, Fr.]
A chest or bag in which clothes are carried.
I desired him to carry one of my portmanteaus;
but he laughed, and bid another do it. Spenser.

PORTOISE. n. s. In sea language, a ship is said to ride a portoise, when she rides with her yards struck down to the deck. Dict.

PORTRAIT. n. s. [from portrait, Fr.] A picture drawn after the life.
As this idea of perfection is of little use in por- traits, or the resemblances of particular persons, so neither is it in the characters of comedy and tragedy, which are always to be drawn with some speck of frailty, such as they have been described in history. Dryden.
The figure of his body was strong, proportion-able, beautiful; and were his picture well drawn, it must deserve the praise given to the portraits of Raphael. Prior.
If a portrait painter is desirous to raise and improve his subject, he has no other means than by approaching it to a general idea; he leaves out all the minute breaks and peculiarities in the face, and changes the dress from a temporary fashion to one more permanent, which has annexed to it no idea of meanness from its being familiar to us. Reynolds.
In portraits, the grace, and, we may add, the likeness, consists more in taking the general air, than in observing the exact similitude of every feature. Reynolds.

To PORTRAIT. v. a. [from portrait, Fr.
from the noun.] To draw; to portray. It is perhaps ill copied, and should be written in the following examples portray.

In most exquisite pictures, they blaze and portrait not only the dainty lineaments or beauty, but also round about shadow the rude thickets and craggy cliffs. Spenser.
I portrait in Arthur the image of a brave knight, perfect in the twelve private moral virtues. Spens.

PORTRAITURE. n. s. [from portraiture, Fr.
from portray.] Picture; painted resemblance.
By the image of my cause I see
The portraiture of his. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Let some strange mysterious dream
Wave at his wings in airy stream
Of lively portraiture display'd,
Softly on my eye-lids laid. Milton.
Herein was also the portraiture of a hart. Brown.
This is the portraiture of our earth, drawn without flattery. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Her wry-mouth'd portraiture
Display'd the fates her confessors endure. Pope.
He delineates and gives us the portraiture of a perfect orator. Raker.

To PORTRAY. v. a. [from peindre, Fr.]

1. To paint; to describe by picture.
The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen portrayed in many places of their church steeple. Carew.
Take a tile, and so portray upon it the city Jerusalem. Euclid.
Our Phenix queen was there portray'd too bright, Beauty alone could beauty take so right. Dryden.

2. To adorn with pictures.
Shields
Various, with boastful argument portray'd. Milton.

PORTRESS. n. s. [from porter.] A female guardian of a gate. Janitrix.
The portress of hell-gate reply'd. Milton.
The shoes put on, our faithful portress
Admits us in to storm the fortress;
While like a cat with walnuts shod,
Stumbling at ev'ry step she trod. Swift's Miscellany.

PORWIGLE. n. s. A tadpole or young frog not yet fully shaped.
That black and round substance began to grow oval, after a while the head, the eyes, the tail to be discernible, and at last to become that which the ancients called gyrinus, we a porwigle or tadpole. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PORY. adj. [from porus, French; from por.
Full of pores.
To the court arriv'd, th' admiring son
Beholds the vaulted roofs of por stone. Dryden.

To POSE. v. a. [from pose, an old word signifying heaviness or stupefaction.
zeugose, Saxon. Skinner.]

1. To puzzle; to gravel; to put to a stand or stop.
Learning wa pos'd, philosophy was set,
Sophisters taken in a fisher's net. Herbert.
How God's eternal Son should be man's brother,
Poseth his proudest intellectual power. Croshaw.
The only remaining question to me I confess is a posing one. Hammond.
As an evidence of human infirmities, I shall give instances of our intellectual blindness, not that I design to pose them with those common enigmas of magnetism. Glanville.
Particularly in learning of languages, there is least occasion for posing of children. Locke on Educ.

2. To appose; to interrogate.
She in the presence of others pos'd him and sifted him, thereby to try whether he were indeed the very duke of York or no. Bacon.

POSER. n. s. [from pose.] One that asketh questions to try capacities; an examiner.
He that questioneth much, shall learn much;
but let his questions not be troublesome, for that is fit for a poser. Bacon.

POSITED. adj. [from positus, Latin. It has the appearance of a participle preter.

no verb.] Placed; ranged.
The principle that sets on work these organs is the modification of matter, or the natural motion thereof thus or thus posited or disposed, is most apparently false. Hale.

POSITION. n. s. [from position, French; positio,
Latin.]

1. State of being placed; situation.
Iron having stood long in a window, being hence taken, and by the help of a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude till it attain the former position. Watson.
They are the happiest regions for fruits, by the excellence of soil, the position of mountains, and the frequency of streams. Temple.
Since no one sees all, and we have different prospects of the same thing, according to our different positions to it, it is not incongruous to try whether another may not have notions that escaped him. Locke.
By varying the position of my eye, and moving it nearer to or farther from the direct beam of the sun's light, the colour of the sun's reflected light constantly varied upon the speculum as it did upon my eye. Newton's Opticks.
Place ourselves in such a position toward the object, or place the object in such a position toward our eye, as may give us the clearest representation of it; for a different position greatly alters the appearance of bodies. Watts's Logic.

2. Principle laid down.
Of any offence or sin therein committed against God, with what conscience can ye accuse us, when your own positions are, that the things we observe should every one of them be dearer unto us than ten thousand lives? Hooker.
Let not the proof of any positions depend on the positions that follow, but always on those which go before. Watts.

3. Advancement of any principle.
A fallacious illation is to conclude from the posi- tion of the antecedent unto the position of the consequent, or the remotion of the consequent to the remotion of the antecedent. Brown.

4. [In grammar.] The state of a vowel placed before two consonants, as pomp- ous; or a double consonant, as axle.

POSITIONAL. adj. [from position.] Respecting position.
The leaves of cataputia or spurge plucked upwards or downwards, performing their operations by purge or vomit, as old wives still do preach, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

POSITIVE. adj. [from positivus, Lat. positif,
French.]

1. Not negative; capable of being affirmed; real; absolute.
The flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.
It is well and truly said in schools, in sin there is nothing positive; but it is a want of that which ought to be, or subsist, partly in the nature of man, and partly in the actions of nature. Perkins.
Hardness carries somewhat more of positive in it than impenetrability, which is negative; and is perhaps more a consequence of solidity, than soli-dity itself. Locke.
Whatever doth or can exist, or be considered as one thing, is positive; and so not only simple ideas and substances, but modes also are positive beings, though the parts, of which they consist, are very often relative one to another. Locke.

2. Absolute; particular; direct; not implied.
As for positive words, that he would not bear arms against king Edward's son, though the words seem calm, yet it was a plain and direct over-ruling of the king's title. Bacon.

3. Dogmatical; ready to lay down notions

ations with confidence; stubborn in opinion.

I am sometimes doubting, when I might be positive, and sometimes confident out of season.

Rymer.

Some positive persisting fops we know,
That, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
But you, with pleasure, own your errors past,
And make each day a critique on the last.

Pope.

4. Settled by arbitrary appointment.

In laws, that which is natural, bindeth universally, that which is positive, not so.

Hobbes.

Altho' no laws but positive be mutable, yet all are not mutable which be positive; positive laws are either permanent or else changeable, according as the matter itself is, concerning which they were made.

Hobbes.

The law is called positive, which is not inbred, implanted, or infused, into the heart of man, by nature or grace; but is imposed by an external mandate of a lawgiver, having authority to command.

Wright.

Laws are but positive; love's power, we see,
Is nature's sanction, and her first decree.

Dryden.

5. Having the power to enact any law.

Not to consent to the enacting of such a law, which has no view but to the general good, unless another law shall at the same time pass, with no other view but that of advancing the power of one party alone, what is this but to claim a positive voice, as well as a negative?

Locke.

6. Certain; assured: as, he was positive as to the fact.

POSITIVELY. adv. [from positive]

1. Absolutely; by way of direct position.

The good or evil, which is removed, may be esteemed good or evil comparatively, and not positively or simply.

Bacon.

2. Not negatively.

It is impossible that any successive duration should be actually and positively infinite, or have infinite successions already gone and past.

Berkeley.

3. Certainly; without dubitation.

Give me some breath, some little pause,
Before I positively speak in this.

Shakespeare.

It was absolutely certain, that this part was positive yours, and could not possibly be written by any other.

Dryden.

4. Peremptorily; in strong terms.

I would ask any man, that has but once read the bible, whether the whole tenor of the divine law does not positively require humility and meekness to all men.

Spratt.

POSITIVENESS. n. s. [from positive]

1. Actualness; not mere negation.

The positive acts of sins of commission lie both in the habitude of the will and in the executed act too; whereas the positive acts of sins of omission lie in the habitude of the will only.

Newton.

2. Peremptoriness; confidence.

This peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magistratality in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact, in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith.

Government of the Tongue.

POSITIVITY. n. s. [from positive]

Peremptoriness; confidence.

A low word.

Courage and positiveness are never more necessary than on such an occasion, but it is good to put some argument with them of real and convincing force, and let it be fully pronounced too.

Harris.

POSITURE. n. s. [from positura, Latin.] The manner in which any thing is placed.

Supposing the positure of the party's hand who did throw the dice, and supposing all other things, which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary.

Leibniz.

POSNET. n. s. [from basinet, French.]

Skinner.] A little basin; a porringer; a skillet.

To make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin in equal quantity, and also whether it yield no fineness more than silver; and again whether it will endure the ordinary fire, which belongeth to chaffing-dishes, points, and such other silver vessels.

Bacon.

POSSE. n. s. [Lat.] An armed power; from posse comitatus, the power of the shires. A low word.

The posse comitatus, the power of the whole county, is legally committed unto him.

Bacon.

As if the passion that rules, were the sheriff of the place, and came off with all the posse, the understanding is leiz d.

Locke.

TO POSSESS. v. a. [possessus, Latin; posseder, French.]

1. To have as an owner; to be master of; to enjoy or occupy actually.

She will not let instructions enter Whence folly now possesses. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Rec'd a gift,
Here in the court, of all he dies posse d, Unto his son. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. To seize; to obtain.

The English marched towards the river Elbe, intending to possess a lull, also Under-Elbe. Ray.

3. To give possession or command of any thing; to make master of. It has of before that which is possessed; sometimes anciently with.

Is he yet posse d,

How much you would? —
—Ay, ay, three thousand ducats. Shakespeare.

16. man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
Mach posse d with some store of crowns. Shak.

This posse d us of the most valuable blessing of human life, friendship. Government of the Tongue.

Serein I to thee suffice only. Shak.

Of hap, pink, or not, who am alone from all eternity? Milton's Paradise Lost.

I hope to posse d chymists and computationists of the advantages to each party, by confederacy between them. Steele.

The intent of this fable is to posse d us of a just sense of the vanity of this craving a pet too. Locke.

Whole brutes, of their whole nature, posse d,
Are often ruin'd at their own request. Dryden.

Of fortune's favour long posse d,
He was with-lighter only blest d. Dryden.

We posse d ourselves of the kingdom of Naples, the duchy of Milan, and the avenue of France in Italy. Johnson.

Endowed with the greatest perfections of nature, and posse d of all the advantages of external condition, Solomon could not find happiness. Prior.

4. To fill with something fixed.

It is of unspeakable advantage to posse d our minds with an habitual good intention, and to aim all our thoughts, words, and actions at some fixed able end. Addison.

Those, under the great officers, know every little case that is before the great man, and if they are posse d with honest minds, will consider po-very as a recommendation. Addison.

5. To have power over, as an unclean spirit.

Beware what spirit reigns in your breast;
For ten inspir'd, ten thousand are posse d. Reform.

Inspir'd within, and yet posse d without. Cleaver.

I think, that the man is posse d. Swift.

6. To affect by intestine power.

He's posse d with greatness,
And speaks not to himself, out with a pride
That quarrels at his breath. Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue,
Which shall posse d them with the heaviest sound
I but can yet they heard. Shakespeare.

Posse d with rumours full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear.

Shakespeare.

What fury, O son,
Posse d thee, to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head? Milton's Paradise Lost.

With the rage of all their race posse d,
Stung to the soul the brothers start from rest. Pope.

POSSESSION. n. s. [possession, French; possessio, Latin.]

1. The state of owning or having in one's own hands or power; property.

He shall inherit her, and his generation shall hold her in possession. Exodus. iv. 16.

In possession such, not only of right,
I call you. Milton.

2. The thing possessed.

Do nothing to lose the best possession of life, that of honour and truth. Temple.

A man has no right over another's life, by his having a property in land and possessions. Locke.

3. Madness caused by the internal operation of an unclean spirit.

TO POSSESSION. v. a. To invest with property. Obsolete.

Sundry more gentlemen this little hundred pos- sessed and possession. Curtis.

POSSESSOR. n. s. [from possession]

Master; one that has the power or property of any thing.

They were people, whom, having been of old freemen and possessions, the Lacedemonians had conquered. Sady.

POSSESSIVE. adj. [possessivus, Lat.] Having possession.

POSSESSORY. adj. [possessoire, French; from posse d.] Having possession.

This he detains from the ivy much against his will, for he should be the true possessory lord thereof.

Hopewell.

POSSESSOR. n. s. [possessor, Latin; posse d, French.] Owner; master; proprietor.

Thou profoundest hell

Receive thy new posse d. Milton.

A considerable difference lies between the honour of men for natural and acquired excellencies and divine graces, that those having more of human nature in them, the honour doth more directly redound to the posse d of them. Stillingfleet.

I was the interest of those, who thirsted after the possessions of the clergy, to represent the posse ders in as vile colours as they could. Atterbury's Sermons.

Think of the happiness of the prophets and apostles, saints and martyrs, who are now rejoicing in the presence of God, and see themselves posse ders of eternal glory. Law.

POSSUT. n. s. [posca, Latin.] Milk
curdled with wine or any acid.

We'll have a posse at the latter end of a sea coal fire. Shakespeare.

In came the bridesmaids with the posse d,
The bridegroom eat in spite. Suckling.

I allowed him medicated broths, posse d ale, and pearl julep. Wife's Surgery.

A sparing diet did her health assure;
Or sick, a pepper posse d was her cure. Dryden.

The cure of the stone consists in vomiting with posse d drink, in which ather roots are boiled. Floyer.

Increase the milk when it is diminished by the too great use of flesh meats, by gruels and posse d drink. Arbutnot.

TO POSSUT. v. a. [from the noun.]

To turn; to curdle: as milk with acids.

Not used.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a sudden vigour, it doth posse d
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakespeare's Ham.

POSSIBILITY. n. s. [possibilité, French.]

The power of being in any manner;
the state of being possible.

There

There is no such thing as a free lunch. And then in post he came from Mantua To this same monument. Shak. Romeo and Juliet. Sent from Meida post to Egypt. Milton. He who rides post through an unknown country cannot distinguish the situation of places. Dry. 3. [Post, Fr. from positus, Lat.] Situation; seat. The waters rise every where upon the surface of the earth; which new post, when they had once seized on, they would never quit. Burnet. 4. Military station. See before the gate what stalking ghost Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post? Dryden. As I watch'd the gates, Lodg'd on my post, a herald is arriv'd From Caesar's camp. Addison's Cato. Whate'er spirit, careless of his charge, His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large, Shall feel sharp vengeance. Pope. Each of the Grecian captains he represents conquering a single Trojan, while Diomed encounters two at once; and when they are engaged, each in his distinct post, he only is drawn fighting in every quarter. Pope. 5. Place; employment; office. Every man has his post assigned to him, and in that station he is well, if he can but think himself so. L'Estrange. False men are not to be taken into confidence, nor fearful men into a post that requires resolution. L'Estrange. Without letters a man can never be qualified for any considerable post in the camp; but courage and corporal force, unless joined with conduct, the usual effects of contemplation, are no more fit to command than a tempest. Collier. While you, my lord, the rural shades admire, And from Britannia's publick post retire, Me into foreign realms my fate conveys. Addison. Certain laws, by sufferers thought unjust, Deny'd all posts of profit or of trust. Pope. Many thousands there are, who determine the justice or madness of national administrations, whom neither God nor men ever qualified for such a post of judgment. Watts. 6. [Post, Latin.] A piece of timber set erect. The blood they shall strike on the two side posts and upper post of the house. Exodus, xii. 7. Fir-trees, cypresses, and cedars being, by a kind of natural rigour, inflexible downwards, are thereby fit for posts or pillars. Watson's Architect. Post is equivocal; it is a piece of timber, or a swift messenger. Watts's Logic.

Can we possibly his love desert? Milton. 2. Perhaps; without absurdity. Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon. Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscribed by laws. Addison. POST. n. s. [post, French; aguir postits courier.] 1. A hasty messenger; a courier who comes and goes at stated times; commonly a letter carrier. In certain places there be always fresh posts to carry that farther which is brought unto them by the other. Abbot. These I'll take up, the post unfranchis'd Of murtherous lechery. Shakespeare's King Lear. A fear my Julia would not deny my lines, Rectifying them by such a worthless post. Shakespeare. A cyprian in the way has travell'd a footman, by a post out of the way. Ben Jonson's Discovery. I send you the fair copy of the poem on dulness, which I should not care to hazard by the common post. Pope. 2. Quick course or manner of travelling. This is the sense in which it is taken; but the expression seems elliptical; to ride post, is to ride as a post, or to ride in the manner of a post; courier en poste; whence Shakespeare, to ride in post.

POSSIBLE. adj. [possible, French; possibilis, Latin.] Having the power to be or to be done; not contrary to the nature of things. Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whitgift. With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible. Matthew, xix. 26. All things are possible to him that believeth. Mark. Firm we submit, but possible to swerve. Milton. He must not stay within doors, for fear the house should fall upon him, for that is possible: nor must he go out, lest the next man that meets him should kill him, for that is also possible. Wilkins. It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles in men's minds in words of uncertain signification. Locke. Set a pleasure-tamping, and the hand of the Almighty visible, prepared to take vengeance, and tell whether it be possible for people wantonly to offend against the law. Locke.

POSSIBLY. adv. [from possible.] 1. By any power really existing. Within the compass of which laws, we do not only comprehend what ever may be really known to belong to the duty of all men, but even what-soever may possibly be known to be of that quality. Houder. Can we possibly his love desert? Milton. 2. Perhaps; without absurdity. Possibly he might be found in the hands of the earl of Essex, but he would be dead first. Clarendon. Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority circumscribed by laws. Addison.

posterity, fallible as they, grow bold and daring, where the other would have trembled, let them look to it. Waterland.

POSTERN. n. f. [poterne, Fr. posterna, Dutch; janua postica, Latin.] A small gate; a little door.
Ere dawning light
Discover'd had the world to heaven wide,
He by a privy postern took his flight,
That of no envious eyes he mote be spy'd. Spenser.
Go on, good Eglington,
Out at the postern by the abbey wall. Shakespeare.
By broken byways did I inward pass,
And in that window made a postern wide. Fairfax.
These issued into the baile court through a privy postern, and sharply visited the assailants with halberds. Hayward.
Great Britain hath had by his majesty a strong addition; the postern, by which we were so often entered and surpris'd, is now made up. Raleigh.
The conscious priest, who was suborn'd before,
Stood ready posted at the postern door. Dryden.
If the nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to the audience in the brain, be so disorder'd, as not to perform their functions, they have no postern to be admitted by, no other ways to bring themselves into view. Locke.
A private postern opens to my gardens,
Through which the beauteous captive might remove. Rome.

letter he takes in, in the box belonging to the proper road. Watts.

POSTHUMOUS. adj. [posthumus, Latin;
posthume, Fr.] Done, had, or published after one's death.
In our present miserable and divided condition, how just soever a man's pretensions may be to a great or blameless reputation, he must, with regard to his posthumous character, content himself with such a consideration, as induced the famous Sir Francis Bacon, after having bequeathed his soul to God, and his body to the earth, to leave his fame to foreign nations. Addison.

POSTICK. adj. [posticus, Latin.] Backward.
The postick and backward position of the feminine parts in quadrupeds, can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generation. Brown.

Latin.] The paragraph added to the end of a letter.
I think he prefers the publick good to his private opinion; and therefore is willing his proposals should with freedom be examined; thus I understand his postscript. Locke.
One, when he wrote a letter, would put that which was most material in the postscript. Bacon.
The following letter I shall give my readers at length, without either preface or postscript. Addison.
Your saying that I ought to have writ a postscript to Gay's, makes me not content to write less than a whole letter. Pope.

POSTULATE. v. a. [postulo, Lat.
postuler, French.] To beg or assume without proof.
They most powerfully magnify God, who, not from postulated and precarious inferences, entreat a courteous assent, but from experiments and undeniable effects. Brown.

POSTULATE. n. f. [postulatum, Latin.] Position supposed or assumed without proof.
This we shall induce not from postulates and in-treated maxims, but from undeniable principles. Brown.
Some have cast all their learning into the method of mathematicians, under theorems, problems, and postulates. Watts.

As if cold water had been pour'd upon you. Dryden.

2. To emit; to give vent to; to send forth; to let out; to send in a continued course.
Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round. Shak.
London doth pour out her citizens;
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
With the plebeians swarming. Shakespeare's Henry V.
As thick as hail
Came post on post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The devotion of the heart is the tongue of the soul; actuated and heated with love, it pours itself forth in supplications and prayers. Duff.
If we had growth of luxuriance current by law,
that

that wanted one third of the silver by the standard, who can imagine, that our neighbours would not pour in quantities of such money upon us, to the great loss of the kingdom? Locke.

A horn case in which powder is kept for guns.

You may stiek your candle in a bottle or a powderhorn. Swift.

POWDERMILL. n. f. [powder and mill.]

The mill in which the ingredients for gunpowder are ground and mingled.

Upon the blowing up of a powdermill, the windows of adjacent houses are bent and blown outwards, by the elastic force of the air within exerting itself. Arbutnot.

POWDER-ROOM. n. f. [powder and room.]

The part of a ship in which the gunpowder is kept.

The flame invades the powder-rooms, and then their guns shoot bullets, and their vessels men. Waller.

POWDER-CHESTS. n. f. On board a ship, wooden triangular chests filled with gunpowder, pebble-stones, and such like materials, set on fire when a ship is boarded by an enemy, which soon makes it clear before them. Dick.

POWDERING-TUB. n. f. [powder and tub.]

1. The vessel in which meat is salted.

When we view those large bodies of oxen, what can we better conceive them to be, than so many living and walking powdering-tubs, and that they have animam salis? More.

2. The place in which an infected lecher is physicked to preserve him from putrefaction.

To the spital go,
And from the powdering-tub of infamy
Fetch forth the lazar like Doll Tearheart. Shakespeare.

POWDERY. adj. [poudreux, Fr. from powder.] Dusty; friable.

A brown powdery ear, which holds iron, is found amongst the iron ore. Woodward on Puffin.

POWDER. n. f. [poudoir, French.]

1. Command; authority; dominion; influence of greatness.

If law, authority, and pow'r deny not,
It will go hard with poor Anthonio. Shakespeare.

No man could ever have a just power over the life of another, by right of property in land. Locke.

Power is no blessing in itself, but when it is employed to protect the innocent. Swift.

2. Influence; prevalence upon.

If ever
You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy.

Then you shall know the wound invisible,

That love's been across me. Shakespeare.

This man had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. Romeo's Essay.

Dejected! no; it never shall be said;
That face had power upon a Spartan soul;
My mind on its own ventura stands unmov'd
And stable, as the fabric of the world. Dryden.

3. Ability; force; reach.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.

I have suffer'd in your woe;
Not shall be wanting ought within my power,
For your relief in my refreshing bower. Dryden.

You are still living to enjoy the blessings of all the good you have performed, and many prayers that your power of doing generous actions may be as extended as your will. Dryden.

It is not in the power of the most enlarged understanding, to invent one new simple idea in the mind, not taken in by the ways aforementioned. Locke.

'Tis not in the power of want or slavery to make them miserable. Addison.

Though it be not in our power to make affliction no affliction; yet it is in our power to take off the edge of it, by a steady view of those divine joys prepared for us in another state. Arbutnot.

4. strength; motive; force.

Observing in ourselves, that we can at pleasure move several parts of our bodies which were at rest; the effects also that natural bodies are able to produce in one another occurring every moment to our senses, we both these ways get the idea of power. Locke.

5. The moving force of an engine.

By understanding the true difference betwixt the weight and the power, a man may add such a sitting supplement to the strength of the power, that it shall move any conceivable weight, though it should never so much exceed that force which the power is naturally endowed with. Wilkins.

6. Animal strength; natural strength.

Care, not fear; or fear not for themselves, altered something the countenances of the two lovers: but so as any man might perceive, was rather an assembling of powers than dissimulations of courage. Sidney.

He died of great years, but of strong health and powers. Bacon.

7. Faculty of the mind.

I was in the thought, they were not fairies, and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief. Shakespeare.

In our little world, this soul of ours
Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
Doth use, on divers objects, divers powers;
And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.

Maintain the empire of the mind over the body, and keep the appetites of the one in due subjection to the reasoning powers of the other. Atterbury.

The design of this science is to rescue our reasoning powers from their unhappy slavery and darkness. Watson.

8. Government; right of governing; correlative to subjection.

My labour
Honest and lawful, to deserve my food
Of those who have me in their civil power. Milton.

9. Sovereign; potentate.

'Tis surprising to consider with what heats these two powers have contended their title to the kingdom of Cyprus, that is in the hands of the Turk. Addison on Italy.

10. One invested with dominion.

After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The stiles turn'd some men to flowers,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial powers,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Dante.

11. One invested with dominion.

After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The stiles turn'd some men to flowers,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial powers,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Dante.

12. One invested with dominion.

After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The stiles turn'd some men to flowers,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial powers,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Dante.

13. One invested with dominion.

After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The stiles turn'd some men to flowers,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial powers,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Dante.

14. One invested with dominion.

After the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Matthew.

The stiles turn'd some men to flowers,
And others did with brutish forms invest;
And did of others make celestial powers,
Like angels, which still travel, yet still rest. Dante.

If there's a power above us,
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works, he must delight in virtue.

11. Divinity.

Merciful powers!
Refrain in me the cursed thoughts that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Cast down thyself, and only strive to raise
The glory of thy Maker's sacred name;
Use all thy pow'rs, that blessed pow'r to praise,
Which gives thee pow'r to be and use the same.

With indignation, thence he broke,
His awful silence, and the pow'r bespoke. Dryden.
Tell me,
What are the gods the better for this gold?
The wretch that offers from his wealthy store
These presents, bribes the powers to give him more.

12. Host; army; military force.

He, to work with the gods mischief, sent over his brother Edward with a power of Scots and Redshanks into Ireland, where they got footing.

Never such a power,
For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land. Shakespeare.
Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along? Shak.
My heart, dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look, to see his father
Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain. Sba.
Gazelus, upon the coming of the balls, valiantly issued forth with all his powers, and gave him battle. Kudler.

13. A large quantity; a great number. In low language; as, a power of good things. Force, French.

POW'ERABLE. adj. [from power.] Capable of performing any thing. Not in use.

That you may see how powerable time is in altering tongues, I will let down the Lord's prayer as it was translated in sundry ages. Coma. n.

POW'ERFUL. adj. [from power and full.]

1. Invested with command or authority; potent.

2. Forcible; mighty.
We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What heaven's lord hath powerfuller to send Against us from about his throne. Milton.
Henry II. endeavouring to establish his grandfather's laws, met with powerful opposition from archbishop Becket. Ayliff.

3. Efficacious; as, a powerful medicine.

POW'ERFULLY. adv. [from powerful.] Potently; mightily; efficaciously; forcibly.

The sun and other powerfully lucid bodies dazzle our eyes. Boyle.

By assuming a privilege belonging to riper years, to which a child must not aspire, you do but add new force to your example, and recommend the action more powerfully. Locke.

Before the revelation of the gospel, the wickedness and impiety of the heathen world was a much more excusable thing, because they had but very obscure apprehensions of those things which urge men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson.

The grain of gold upon all the golden coast of Guinea, is displayed by the rains falling there with incredible force, powerfully beating off the earth. Woodward.

POW'ERFULNESS. n. s. [from powerful.]

Power; efficacy; might; force.
So much he stands upon the powerfulness of the christian religion, that he makes it beyond all the rules of moral philosophy, strongly effectual to expel vice, and plant in men all kind of virtue, Hatfield on Providence.

POW'ERLESS. adj. [from power.] Weak;
impotent.

I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unfeigned love. Shakespeare.
POX. n. s. [properly pock, which originally signified small bags or pustules; of the same original, perhaps, with powke or pouch. We still use pock, for a single pustule; pockar, Saxon; pocken, Dutch.]

1. Pustules; efflorescencies; exanthema- tous eruptions. It is used of many eruptive distempers.

O! if to dance all night and dress all day
-Charm'd the small pox, or chack'd old age away.

2. The venereal disease. This is the sense when it has no epithet.

Though brought to their ends by some other apparent disease, yet the pox hath been judged the foundation. W. Jernam.

Wilt thou still sparkle in the box,
Canst thou forget thy age and pox? Derst.
POY. n. s. [appoye, Spanish; appuy, poids,
French.] A rope dancer's pole.

TO POZE. v. a. To puzzle. See POSE and APPOSE.

And say you so? then I shall poze you quickly.

Of human infirmities I shall give instances, not that I design to poze them with those common enigmas of magnetism, fluxes and refluxes. Glarv.

PRACTICABLE. adj. [from practicable, Fr.]

1. Performable; feasible; capable to be practised.

This falls out for want of examining what is practicable and what not, and for want again of measuring our force and capacity with our design.

An heroic poem should be more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us, than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

This is a practicable degree of christian magnanimity. Atterbury.

Some physicians have thought, that if it were practicable, to keep the humours of the body in an exact balance of each with its opposite, it might be immortal; but this is impossible in the practice.

2. Assailable; fit to be assailed: as, a practicable breach.

PRACTICABLENESS. n. s. [from practicable.] Possibility to be performed.

PRACTICABLY. adv. [from practicable.]
In such a manner as may be performed.

The meanest capacity, when he sees a rule
practicably applied before his eyes, can no longer be at a loss how it is to be performed. Regier.

PRACTICAL. adj. [from practicus, Lat. pra-tique, French; from practico.] Relating to action; not merely speculative.

The image of God was no less resplendent in man's practical understanding; namely, that stor-house of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

Religion comprehends the knowledge of its principles; and a suitable life and practice; the first, being speculative, may be called knowledge; and the latter, because it's practical, wisdom. Tillotson.

PRACTICALLY. adv. [from practical.]

1. In relation to action. 2. By practice; in real fact.

I honour her, having practically found her among the better sort of men. Howell's Vocal Forest.

PRACTICALNESS. n. s. [from practical.]

The quality of being practical.

PRACTICE. n. s. [from practicus, Lat. pratique,
French.]

1. The habit of doing any thing.

2. Use; customary etc.

Obsolete words may be laudably revived, when they are more sounding, or more significant than those in practice. Dryden.

Of such a practice when Ulysses told;
Shall we, cries one, permit
This lewd romancer and his hanting wit? Tate.

3. Dexterity acquired by habit.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shak.

4. Actual performance, distinguished from theory.

There are two functions of the soul, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects, some of which only entertain our speculations, others also employ our actions; to the understanding, with relation to these, is divided into speculative and practical. South.

5. Method or art of doing any thing.

6. Medical treatment of diseases.

This disease is beyond my practice; yet I have known those which have waked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds. Shakespeare.

7. Exercise of any profession.

After one or more ulcers formed in the lungs,
I never, as I remember, in the course of above forty years practice, saw more than two recover.

Blackmore.

8. [Præ, Saxon, is cunning, slyness, and thence prat, in Douglas, is a trick or fraud; latter times, forgetting the ori- ginal of words, applied to practice the sense of prat.] Wicked stratagem; bad artifice. A sense not now in use.

He fought to have that by practice, which he could not by prayer; and being allowed to visit us, he used the opportunity of a fit time thus to deliver us. Sidney.

With suspicion of practice, the king was suddenly turned. Sidney.

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hands,
The practice and the purpose of the king. Shaksp.
Shall we thus permit

A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him to near us? this needs must be practice;
Who knew of your intent and coming hither? Sba.

Wife states prevent purposes
Before they come to practice, and foul practices
Before they grow to act. Denham's Supply.

Unreasonable it is to expect that those who lived before the rise and condemnation of heresies, should come up to every accurate form of expression, which long experience afterwards found necessary, to guard the faith, against the subtle practices, or provoking insults of its adversaries. Waterland.

PRACTICK. adj. [from practicus; practicus,
Latin; pratique, French.]

1. Relating to action; not merely theore- tical.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences;
So that the act and practice part of life
Must be the mistress to this theoretic. Shakespeare.
Whilst they contend for speculative truth, they,
by mutual calumnies, forfeit the practice.

Government of the Tongue.

True piety without cessation rest
By theories, the practice part is lost. Denham.

2. In Spenser it seems to signify, dry; arti- ficial.

She used hath the practice a pain
Of this false footman, cloak'd with simpleness.

Spenser.

Thereto his subtle engines he doth bend,
His practice wit, and his fair filed tongue,
With thousand other sleights. Spenser.

TO PRACTISE. v. a. [from practicus; pratique,
French.]

1. To do habitually.

Incline not my heart to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity. Psal. cxli. 4.

2. To do; not merely to profess: as, to practise law or physick.

3. To use in order to habit and dexterity.

At practis'd distances to cinge, not fight. Milt.

To PRACTISE. v. n.

1. To form a habit of acting in any manner

Will truth return unto them that practise in her?

They shall practise how to live secure. Ecclesi.

Off have we wonder'd

How such a ruling spirit you cou'd refrain,
And practise first over yourself to reign. Waller.

2. To transact; to negotiate secretly.

I've practis'd with him,

And found a means to let the victor know,
That Syphax and Sempronius are his friends. Addis.

3. To try artifices.

Others by guilty artifice and arts
Of promis'd kindness practise on our hearts;
With expectation blow the passion up,
She fans the fire without one gale of hope. Granv.

4. To use bad arts or stratagems.

If you there

Did practise on my state, your being in Egypt
Might be my question, Shakspeare's Ant. and Cleop.
If thou do'st him any slight disgrace, he will practise against thee by poison. Shak. As you like it.

5. To use medical methods.

I never thought I should try a new experiment, being little inclined to practise upon others, and as little that others should practise upon me.

Temple's Miscellanies.

6. To exercise any profession.

PRACTISANT. n. f. [from To practise.]

An agent.

Here enter'd Iucelle and her practisants.

Shakspeare.

PRACTISER. n. f. [from To practise.]

1. One that practises any thing; one that does any thing habitually.

We will, in the principles of the politician, shew how little efficacy they have to advance the practiser of them to the things they aspire to. South.

2. One who prescribes medical treatment.

Sweet practiser, thy physick I will try,
That ministers thine own death if I die. Shakspeare.
I had reason'd myself into an opinion, that the use of physicians, unless in some acute disease, was a venture, and that their greatest practisers practis'd least upon themselves. Temple.

PRACTITIONER. n. f. [from practise.]

1. He who is engaged in the actual exercise of any art.

The author exhorts all gentlemen practitioners to exercise themselves in the transitory.
I do not know a more universal and unnecessary mistake among the clergy, but especially the younger practitioners. Swift.

2. One who uses any fly or dangerous arts.

There are some papistical practitioners among you.

Waller.

3. One who does any thing habitually.

He must be first an exercised, thorough-paced practitioner of these vices himself. South.

PRÆCOGNITA. n. f. [Latin.] Things

previously known in order to understanding something else: thus the structure of the human body is one of the præcognita of physick.

Either all knowledge does not depend on certain præcognita or general maxims, called principles, or else these are principles. Locke.

PRAGMATICAL. } adj. [ωράματα.]

PRAGMATIC. } pragmatique, Fr.]

Meddling; impertinently busy; assum## ing business without leave or invitation.

No sham so gross, but it will pass upon a weak man that is pragmatical and inquisitive. L'Estr.
Common estimation puts an ill character upon pragmatical meddling people. Gow. of the Tongue.

He understands no more of his own affairs, than a child; he has got a sort of a pragmatical silly jade of a wife, that pretends to take him out of my hands. Arbutnot.

The fellow grew so pragmatical, that he took upon him the government of my whole family.

Arbutnot.

Such a backwardness there was among good men to engage with an usurping people, and pragmatical ambitious orators. Swift.

They are pragmatical enough to stand on the watch tower, but who assigned them the post?

Swift.

PRAGMATICALLY. adv. [from pragmatical.]

Meddlingly; impertinently.

PRAGMATICALNESS. n. f. [from pragmatical.]

The quality of intermeddling without right or call.

PRAISE. n. f. [prijs, Dutch.]

1. Renown; commendation; fame; honour; celebrity.

Best of fruits, whose taste has taught The tongue, not made for speech, to speak thy praise. Milton.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease

In costly grotto and marble palaces;
But to poor Bassus what avails a name,
To starve on compliments and empty fame? Dryd.

2. Glorification; tribute of gratitude; laud.

He hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God. Psal. xl. 3.

To God glory and praise. Milton.

3. Ground or reason of praise.

Praiseworthy actions are by these embrac'd;
And 'tis my praise to make thy praises last. Dryd.

To PRAISE. v. a. [prissen, Dutch.]

1. To commend; to applaud; to celebrate.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue? Milton.

We praise not Hector, though his name we know
Is great in arms; 'tis hard to praise a foe. Dryden.

2. To glorify in worship.

The shepherds retained, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen. Luke, li. 20.

One generation shall praise thy works to another, and declare thy mighty works. Psal. cxiv. 4.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
prais'd

God and his works. Milton.

PRAISEFUL. adj. [praise and full.]

Laudable; commendable. Not now in use.

Of whose high praise, and praiseful bliss,
Goodness the pen, heaven the paper is.

He ordain'd a lady for his price, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman's Iliad.

PRAISER. n. f. [from praise.]

One who praises; an applauder; a commender.

We men and praisers of men should remember, that if we have such excellencies, it is reason to think them excellent creatures, of whom we are.

Forgive me, if my verse but say you are A Sidney; but in that extend as far As loudest praisers. Ben Jonson's Epigrams.

Turn to God, who knows I think this true,
And use oft, when such a heart mislays,
To make it good; for such a praiser prays. Dana.

PRAISEWORTHY. adj. [praise and wor- thy.] Commendable; deserving praise.

The Thonian goddess having heard Her blessed fame, which all the world has Came down to prove the truth, and she reward
For her praiseworthy workmanship on sight. Spenser.
Since men have left to do praiseworthy things,
Most think all praises flatteries; but truth brings
That found, and that authority with her name,
As to be rais'd by her is only fame. Ben Jonson.
Firmus, who seized upon Egypt, was so far praiseworthy, that he encouraged trade. Arbutnot.

PRANCE. n. f. A flat-bottomed boat.

Bailey.

To PRANCE. v. a. [pronken, Dutch, to set one's self to show.]

1. To spring and bound in high mettle.

Here's no fantastic mask, nor dance,
But of our kids that frisk and prance;
Nor wars are seen,
Unless upon the green

Two harmless lambs are butting one the other.

Wotton.

With mud all's high, the rumbling cart draws near,
Now rule thy prancing steed, lac'd chariot. Gay.

Far be the spirit of the chase from them,
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed.

Thomson.

2. To ride gallantly and ostentatiously.

The horses' hoofs were broken by means of the prancings, the prancings of their mighty ones.

Judges, v. 22.

I see

Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field, Strow'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in slaughter,

His horses' hoofs wet with patrician blood. Addison.

3. To move in a warlike or showy manner.

We should neither have meat to eat, nor manufacture to clothe us, unless we could prance about in coats of mail, or eat brass. Swift.

To PRANK. v. a. [pronken, Dutch.]

To decorate; to dress or adjust to ostentation.

Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenser.

In wine and mests she flow'd above the bank,
And in excess exceeded her own might,
In sumptuous tire she joy'd herself to prank,
But of her love too lavish. Spenser.

These are tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I despise them;
For they do prank them in authority
Against all noble succurance. Shakspeare.

Your high self,
The gracious mark o' th' land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid, Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shak. Winter's Tale.

'Tis that miracle, and queen of gems,
That nature pranks, her mind attracts my soul.

Shakspeare.

I had not unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this jester
Would think to charm my judgment as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, pranks in reason's garb. Milt.

PRANK. n. f. A frolic; a wild flight; a ludicrous trick; a mischievous act. A word of levity.

Way home to him;
Tell him, his pranks have been too broad to bear with. Shakspeare.

Such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, passionous and dissolvent pranks;
The very infants prattle of thy pride. Shakspeare.

They caused the table to be covered and meat set on, which was no sooner set down, than in came the harpies, and played their accustomed pranks.

Raleigh.

They put on their clothes, and played all thof:
pranks you have taken notice of. Addison's Guard.

PRAISON. n. f. [praison.] A leak; also a sea weed as green as a leek. Bailey.

His knowledge of skill is in prating too much.
Tuffer.

Behold me, which owe
A moiety of the throne, here standing
To prate and talk for life and honour, 'fore
Who please to hear. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
This starved justice hath prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbul-street; and every third word a lie.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

After Flammock and the blacksmith had, by joint and several pratings, found tokens of content in the multitude, they offered themselves to lead them. Bacon's Henry VII.

O listen with attentive sight
To what my prating eyes indite! Cleveland.

What nonsense would the fool thy master prate,
When thou, his knave, canst talk at such a rate?
Dryden.

She first did wit's prerogative remove,
And made a fool presume to prate of love. Dryden.
This is the way of the world; the deaf will prate of discords in music. Watts.

PRATE, n. f. [from the verb.] Tattle; slight talk; unmeaning loquacity.

If I talk to him; with his innocent prate,
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead. Shaksp.
Would her innocent prate could overcome me;
Oh! what a conflict do I feel. Denham's Sophy

PRA'TER, n. f. [from prate.] An idle talker; a chatterer.

When expectation rages in my blood,
Is this a time, thou prater? hence, begone.
Southey.

PRA'TINGLY, adv. [from prate.] With tittle tattle; with loquacity.

PRA'TIQUE, n. f. [French; prattica, Italian.] A licence for the master of a ship to traffick in the ports of Italy, upon a certificate that the place from whence he came is not annoyed with any infectious disease. Bailey.

To PRA'TTLE, v. n. [diminutive of prate.] To talk lightly; to chatter; to be trivially loquacious.

I prattle
Something too wildly, and my father's precepts
I therein do forget. Shakespeare's Tempest.
What the great ones do, the less will prattle of.
Shakespeare.

A French woman teaches an English girl to speak and read French, by only prattling to her.
Locke.

There is not so much pleasure to have a child
prattle agreeably, as to reason well. Locke on Educ.

His tongue, his prattling tongue, had chang'd him quite.

To sooty blackness, from the purest white. Aldif.
A little lively rustick, trained up in ignorance and prejudice, will prattle treason a whole evening.
Aldif.

I must prattle on, as afore,
And beg your pardon, yet this half hour. Prout.

Let credulous boys and prattling nurses tell,
How, if the festival of Israhel be clear,
Plenty from lib'ral horn shall strow the year. Gay.

PRA'TTLE, n. f. [from the verb.] Empty talk; trifling loquacity.

In a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious. Shak. Rich. II.

The bookish theorick,
Wherein the togged rascals can propose
As masterly as he; mere prattle, without practice,
Is all his soldiiership. Shakespeare's Othello.

The insignificant prattle and endless garrulosity of the philosophy of the schools. Glanville.

PRA'TTER, n. f. [from prattle.] A trifling talker; a chatterer.

Poor prattler! how thou talk'st. Shakespeare.

Prattler, no more, I say,
My thoughts must work, but like a noiseless sphere,
Harmonious peace must rock them all the day;
No room for prattlers there. Herber.

PRA'VITY, n. f. [pravitas, Lat.] Corruption; badness; malignity.

Doubt not but that sin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton's Paradise Lost.

More people go to the gibbet for want of timely correction, than upon any incurable pravity of nature. L'Esrange.

I will shew how the pravity of the will could influence the understanding to a disbeliever of Christ-ianity. South.

PRAWN, n. f. A small crustaceous fish, like a shrimp, but larger.

I had prawns, and borrowed a mesh of vinegar.
Shakespeare.

To PRAY, v. n. [prier, French; pregare, Italian.]

1. To make petitions to heaven.

I will buy with you, sell with you; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

Pray for this good man and his issue. Shaksp.
Ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes. Shakespeare.

I tell him, we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays, some occasion may detain us longer. Shakespeare.

Is any sick? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him. James, v. 14.
Unskilful with what words to pray, let me interpret for him. Milton.

He that prays, despairs not; but sad is the condition of him that cannot pray, happy are they that can, and do, and love to do it. Taylor.

Thou, Turnus, shalt atone it by thy fate,
And pray to heav'n for peace, but pray too late.
Dryden.

He prais'd my courage, pray'd for my success;
He was to true a father of his country,
To thank me for defending ev'n his foes. Dryden.
They who add devotion to such a life, must be said to pray as Christians, but live as heathens.
Lavo.

Should you pray to God for a recovery, how rash would it be to accuse God of not hearing your prayers, because you found your disease still to continue. Watts.

2. To entreat; to ask submissively.

You shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid for kindness,
Where he for grace is kneel'd to. Shakespeare.

Pray that in towns and temples of renown,
The name of great Anchises may be known. Dryd.

3. I PRAY; that is, I pray you to tell me, is a slightly ceremonious form of introducing a question.

But I pray, in this mechanical formation, when the ferment was expanded to the extremities of the arteries, why did it not break through the receptacle? Bentley's Sermons.

4. Sometimes only pray elliptically.

Barnard in spirit, sense and truth abounds;
Pray then what wants he? fourscore thousand pounds. Pope.

To PRAY, v. a.

1. To supplicate; to implore; to address with submissively petitions.

How much more, if we pray him, will his ear
Be open, and his heart to pity incline? Milton.

2. To ask for as a supplicant.

He that will have the benefit of this act, must pray a prohibition before a sentence in the ecclesiastical court. Hyde.

3. To entreat in ceremony or form.

May my colleague Antonius I may speak with him;

And as you go, call on my brother Quintus,
And pray him with the tribunes to come to me.
Ben Jonson.

PRA'YER, n. f. [priere, French.]

1. Petition to heaven.

They did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
O remember, God!

O hear her prayer for them as now for us. Shaksp.
My heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. Romans, x. 1.

Unreasonable and actual ways of life, whether in labour or diversion, whether they consume our time or our money, are like unreasonable and absurd prayers, and are a truly wasteful to God. Lavo.

2. Mode of petition

The solemn worship of God and Christ is neglected in many congregations, and unless it be correct, an indigested form and conception of eternal prayer is used. M'bu.

3. Practice of supplication.

Were he as famous and as bold in war,
As he is fam'd for modesty, peace, and prayer.
Shakespeare.

4. Single formulæ of petition.

He led to his devotions on that behalf, and made those two excellent prayers which were published immediately after his death. Pell.

Sighs now breathe'd Inutterable, which the spirit of prayer
inspir'd. Milton.

No man can always have the same spiritual pleasure in his prayers; for the greatest saints have sometimes suffered the banishment of the heart, sometimes are fervent, sometimes they feel a barrenness of devotion; for this spirit comes and goes.
Taylor.

5. Entreaty; submissive importunity.

Prayer among men is supposed a means to change the person to whom we pray; but prayer to God does not change him, but fits us to receive the things prayed for. Striding Lect.

PRA'YERBOOK, n. f. [prayer and book.]

Book of publick or private devotions.

Get a prayerbook in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen;
For on that ground I'll build a holy edifice. Shak.

I know not the name, or number of the family which now reigns, farther than the prayerbook informs me. Swift.

PRE, [præ, Latin] A particle which, prefixed to words derived from the Latin, marks priority of time or rank.

To PREACH, v. n. [predico, Latin;
prebier, Fr.] To pronounce a publick discourse upon sacred subjects.

From that time Jesus began to preach. Matthew.
Prophets preach of thee at Jerusalem. Nehemiah.

It is evident in the apostles preaching at Jerusalem and elsewhere, that at the first proposal of the truth of Christ to them, and the doctrine of se-pentance, whole multitudes received the faith, and came in. Hammond.

Divinity would not pass the yard and loom, the sledge or anvil, nor preaching be taken in as an easier supplementary trade, by those that disliked the pains of their own. D'Arcy of Puty.

As he was sent by his father, so were the apostles commissioned by him to preach to the gentle world.

D'Arcy of Puty.

The shape of our cathedral is not proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre with galleries. Graunt.

To PREACH, v. a.

1. To proclaim or publish in religious orations.

The Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge, that the word of God was preached of Paul. Acts.
He decreed to commissionate messengers to preach
this covenant to all mankind. Hammond.

2. To inculcate publicly; to teach with earnestness.

There is not any thing publicly notified, but we may properly say it is preach'd. Hooker.

He oft to them preach'd

Conversion and repentance. Milton.

Can they preach up equality of birth,

And tell us how we all began from earth? Dryden.

Among the rest, the rich Galesus lies,

A good old man while peace he preach'd in vain,

Amidst the madness of th' unruly train. Dryden.

PREACH. n. f. [presche, French; from the verb.] A discourse; a religious oration. Not in use.

This oversight occasion'd the French spitefully to term religion in that sort exercised, a mere preach. Hooker.

PREACHER. n. f. [prescheur, French; from preach.] 1. One who discourses publicly upon religious subjects.

The Lord gave the word; great was the company of the preachers. Psal. lxxviii. 11.

You may hear the sound of a preacher's voice, when you cannot distinguish what he saith. Bacon.

Here lies a truly honest man,

One of those few that in this town

Honour all preachers; hear their own. Crashaw.

2. One who inculcates any thing with earnestness and vehemence.

No preacher is listened to but Time, which gives us the same train of thought, that elder people have tried in vain to put into our heads before. Swift.

PREACHMENT. n. f. [from preach.] A sermon mentioned in contempt; a discourse affectedly solemn.

Was't you that revell'd in our parliament, And made a preachment of your high descent? Shak.

All this is but a preachment upon the text. L'Estr.

PREAMBLE. n. f. [præambule, French.] Something previous; introduction; preface.

How were it possible that the church should any way else with such ease and certainty provide, that none of her children may, as Adam, dissemble that wretchedness, the penitent confession whereof is necessary a preamble, especially to common men. Hooker.

Truth as in this we do not violate, so neither is the same gainstay'd or crossed, no not in those very preambles plac'd before certain readings, wherein the steps of the Latin service book have been somewhat too nearly followed. Hooker.

Doors shut, visits forbidden, and divers contestations with the queen, all preambles of ruin, though now and then, he did wring out some petty contentments. Wotton.

This preamble to that history was, not improper for this relation. Clarendon's History of the Rebellion.

With preambles sweet Of charming symphony they introduce

Then sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milt.

I will not detain you with a long preamble. Dryden.

PREAMBULARY. adj. [from preamble.]

PREAMBULOUS. adj. Previous. Not in use, though not inelegant.

He not only undermineth the base of religion, but destroyeth the principle preambulous unto all belief, and puts upon us the remotest error from truth. Brown.

PREAPPREHENSION. n. f. [pre and ap-prehend.] An opinion formed before examination.

A conceit not to be made out by ordinary eyes, but such as regarding the clouds, behold them in shapes conformable to preapprehensions. Brown.

PREASE. n. f. Prefix; crowd. Spenser.

PREPRESS. Obsolete.

A ship into the sacred sea,
New-built, now launch'd; and from our preps
Chafe two and fifty youths. Chapman.

PREA SING. part. adj. Crowding. Spenser.

PREBEND. n. f. [præbenda, low Latin; prebende, French.]

1. A stipend granted in cathedral churches. His excellency gave the doctor a prebend in St. Patrick's cathedral. Swift's Miscellanies.

2. Sometimes, but improperly, a stipendiary of a cathedral; a prebendary.

Deans and canons, or prebends of cathedral churches, in their first institution, were of great use, to be of counsel with the bishop. Bacon.

PREBENDARY. n. f. [prebendarius, Lat.] A stipendiary of a cathedral.

To lords, to principals, to prebendaries. Hubbard.

I bequeath to the Reverend Mr. Grattan, prebendary of St. Audeon's, my gold bottle-screw. Swift's Last Will.

PRECARIOUS. adj. [precarius, Latin; precarre, Fr.] Dependent; uncertain, because depending on the will of another; held by courtesy; changeable or alienable at the pleasure of another.

No word is more unskillfully used than this with its derivatives. It is used for uncertain in all its senses; but it only means uncertain, as dependent on others: thus there are authors who mention the precariousness of an account, of the weather, of a die.

What subjects will precarious kings regard? A beggar speaks too softly to be heard. Dryden.

Those who live under an arbitrary tyrannick power, have no other law but the will of their prince, and consequently no privileges but what are precarious. Addison.

This little happiness is so very precarious, that it wholly depends on the will of others. Addison.

He who rejoices in the strength and beauty of youth, should consider by how precarious a tenure he holds these advantages, that a thousand accidents may before the next dawn lay all these glories in the dust. Rogers's Sermon.

PRECARIOUSLY. adv. [from precarious.] Uncertainly by dependence; dependently; at the pleasure of others.

If one society precariously meet or convene together without the leave or licence of the other society, nor treat or enact any thing relative to their own society, without the leave and authority of the other; then is that society, in a manner, dissolved, and subsists precariously upon the mere will and pleasure of the other. Lesley.

Our scene precariously subsists too long On French transposition and Italian song; Dare to have sense yourselves; assert the stage, Be justly warm'd with your own native rage. Pope.

PRECARIOUSNESS. n. f. [from precarious.] Uncertainty; dependence on others. The following passage from a book, otherwise elegantly written, affords an example of the impropriety mentioned at the word precarious.

Most consumptive people die of the discharge they spit up, which, with the precariousness of the symptoms of an oppressed diaphragm, from a mere lodgment of extravasated matter, render the operation but little advisable. Sharp's Surgery.

PRECAUTION. n. f. [precaution, French; from precautus, Latin.] Preventive caution; preventive measures.

Unless our ministers have strong assurances of his falling in with the grand alliance, or not opposing it, they cannot be too circumspect and speedy in taking their precautions against any contrary resolution. Addison on the War.

PRECAUTION. v. a. [precautioner,

French; from the noun.] To warn beforehand.

By the diseases, diseases and beggary of hopeful young men brought to ruin, he may be precautioned. Locke.

PRÆCÆDANEUS. adj. [This word is, I believe, mistaken by the author for præcædaneus; præcædaneus, Latin, cut or slain before. Nor is it used here in its proper sense.] Previous; antecedent.

That priority of particles of simple matter, influx of the heavens and preparation of matter might be antecedent and præcædaneus, not only in order, but in time, to their ordinary productions. Hale.

TO PRÆCÆDE. v. a. [præcedo, Latin; præceder, French.]

1. To go before in order of time.

How are we happy, still in fear of harm? But harm præcedes not sin. Milton.

Arius and Pelagius durst provoke To what the centuries præceding spoke. Dryden.

The ruin of a state is generally præceded by an universal degeneracy of manners and contempt of religion. Swift.

2. To go before according to the adjustment of rank.

PRÆCÆDENCE. n. f. [from præcedo, Latin.]

1. The act or state of going before; priority.

2. Something going before; something past. Not used.

I do not like, but yet it does allay The good præcedence. Shakspeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

It is an epilogue or discourse, to make plain Some obscure præcedence that hath tofore been said. Shakspeare.

3. Adjustment of place.

Among the laws touching præcedence in Justinian, divers are, that have not yet been received every where by custom. Selden.

The constable and marshal had cognizance, touching the rights of place and præcedence. Hale.

4. The foremost in ceremony.

None sure will claim in hell Præcedence; none, whose portion is small Of present pain, that with ambitious mind Will covet more. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The royal olive accompanied him with all his court, and always gave him the præcedency. Howell.

That person hardly will be found, With gracious form and equal virtue crown'd; Yet if another could præcedence claim, My first desires could find no fairer aim. Dryden.

5. Superiority.

Books will furnish him, and give him light and præcedency enough to go before a young follower. Locke.

Being distracted with different desires, the next inquiry will be, which of them has the præcedency, in determining the will to the next action? Locke.

PRÆCÆDENT. adj. [præcedent, French; præcedens, Latin.] Former; going before.

Do it at once, Or thy præcedent services are all But accidents unperpos'd. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

Our own præcedent passions do instruct us, What levity 's in youth. Shakspeare's Timon.

When you work by the imagination of another, it is necessary that he, by whom you work, have a præcedent opinion of you, that you can do strange things. Bacon.

Hippocrates, in his prognosticks, doth make good observations of the diseases that ensue upon the nature of the præcedent four seasons of the year. Bacon.

The world, or any part thereof, could not be præcedent to the creation of man. Hale.

Truths,

Truth, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed, that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves; herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

PRECEDENT. n. s. [The adjective has the accent on the second syllable, the substantive on the first.] Any thing that is a rule or example to future times; any thing done before, of the same kind.

Examples for cases can but direct as precedents only. Hooker.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over, The precedent was full as long adoring. Shakespeare.

No pow'r in Venice Can alter a decree establish'd;

'Twill be recorded for a precedent; And many an error, by the same example, Will rush into the state. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

God, in the administration of his justice, is not tied to precedents, and we cannot argue, that the providences of God towards other nations shall be conformable to his dealings with the people of Israel. Tillotson.

Such precedents are numberless; we draw Our right from custom, custom is a law. Grave.

PRECEDENTLY. adv. [from precedent, adj.] Beforehand.

PRECEP'TOR. n. s. [præceptor, Latin; précepteur, French.] He that leads the choir.

Follow this preceptor of ours, in blessing and magnifying that God of all grace, and never yielding to those enemies, which he died to give us power to resist and overcome. Hammond.

PRECEPT. n. s. [precepte, French; præceptum, Latin.] A rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a commandment; a direction.

The custom of lessons furnishes the very simplest and rudest sort with infallible axioms and precepts of sacred truth, delivered even in the very letter of the law of God. Hooker.

'Tis sufficient, that painting be acknowledged for an art; for it follows, that no arts are without their precepts. Dryden.

A precept or commandment consists in, and has respect to, some moral point of doctrine, viz. such as concerns our manners, and our inward and outward good behaviour. Ayliffe.

PRECEPTIAL. adj. [from precept.] Consisting of precepts. A word not in use. Men

Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief Which they themselves not feel; but tasting it, Their counsel turns to passion, which before Would give preceptual medicine to rage; Fetter strong madness in a silken thread, Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shak.

PRECEPTIVE. adj. [præceptivus, Latin; from precept.] Containing precepts; giving precepts.

The ritual, the preceptive, the prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.

As the preceptive part enjoins the most exact virtue, so is it most advantageously enforced by the promissory, which, in respect of the rewards, and the manner of proposing them, is adapted to the same end. Decay of Piety.

The lesson given us here, is preceptive to us not to do any thing but upon due consideration. L'Estrange.

PRECEPTOR. n. s. [præceptor, Latin; précepteur, Fr.] A teacher; a tutor.

Passionate chiding carries rough language with it, and the names that parents and preceptors give children, they will not be ashamed to bestow on others. Locke.

It was to thee, great Stigyrice, unknown, And thy preceptor of divine renown. Blackmore.

PRECÉSSION. n. s. [from præcedo, præcessus, Latin.] The act of going before.

PRECINCT. n. s. [præcinctus, Latin.]

Outward limit; boundary. The main body of the sea being one, yet within divers præcincts, hath divers names; so the catholic church is in like sort divided into a number of distinct societies. Hooker.

This is the manner of God's dealing with those that have lived within the præcincts of the church, they shall be condemned for the very want of true faith and repentance. Purkin.

Through all restraint broke loose, he wings his way

Not far off heav'n, in the præcincts of light, Directly towards the new created world. Milton.

PRECIOUSITY. n. s. [from pretiosus, Lat.]

1. Value; preciousness.
2. Any thing of high price. Not used in either sense.

The index or forefinger was too naked whereto to commit their preciousness, and hath the tuition of the thumb scarer unto the second joint. Brown.

Barbarians seem to exceed them in the curiosity of their application of these preciousness. Mor.

PRECIOUS. adj. [precieux, Fr. pretiosus, Latin.]

1. Valuable; being of great worth.

Many things, which are most precious, are neglected, only because the value of them lieth hid. Hooker.

Why in that swiftness left you wife and children, Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave taking? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I never saw Such precious deeds in one that promis'd nought But beggary and poor luck. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

These virtues are the hidden beauties of a soul, which make it lovely and precious in his sight, from whom no secrets are concealed. Addison's Spect.

2. Costly; of great price: as, a precious stone.

Let none admire That riches grow in hell, that soil may best Deserve the precious bone. Milton.

3. Worthless. An epithet of contempt or irony.

More of the same kind concerning these precious saints amongst the Turks, may be seen in Pietro della Valle. Itzk.

PRECIOUSLY. adv. [from precious.]

1. Valuably; to a great price.
2. Contemptibly. In irony.

PRECIOUSNESS. n. s. [from precious.] Valuableness; worth; price.

Its preciousness equalled the price of pearls. IV. Ikins.

PRECIPICE. n. s. [præcipitium, Lat. precipice, French.] A headlong steep; a fall perpendicular without gradual declivity.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger, And woo your own destruction. Shakespeare.

Where the water dasheth more against the bottom, there it moveth more swiftly and more in precipice; for in the breaking of the waves there is ever a precipice. Bacon.

I ere long that precipice must tread, Whence none return, that leads unto the dead. Samlys.

No stupendous precipice denies Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

Swift down the precipice of time it goes, And sinks in minutes, which in ages rose. Dryden.

His generous mind the fair ideas drew Of fame and honour, which in dangers lay;

Where wealth like fruit, on precipice grew, Not to be gather'd but by birds of prey. Dryden.

Drink as much as you can get; because a good coachman never drives so well as when he is drunk; and then show your skill, by driving to an inch by a precipice. Swift.

PRECIPITANCE. } n. s. [from precipitans.] } tant. } Rash haste; headlong hurry.

Thither they haste with glad precipitance. Milton.

'Tis not likely that one at a thousand such precipitancies should be crown'd with so unexpected an issue. Glauville.

As the chymist, by catching at it too soon, lost the philosophical elixir, so precipitancy of our understanding is an occasion of error. Glauville.

We apply present remedies according unto indications, respecting either the acuteness of disease and precipitancy of occasion, than the rising or setting of stars. Brown.

Hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, I took this opportunity to send a letter to the secretary. Swift.

A rashness and precipitancy of judgment, and hastiness to believe something on one side or the other, plunges us into many errors. Waller.

PRECIPITANT. adj. [præcipitans, Lat.]

1. Falling or rushing headlong.

Without longer pause, Downright into the world's first rag on throws His flight precipitant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

You'll not bear a letter for me; you stand upon your honour; why thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the term of mine honour precise. Shakspeare.

The state hath given you licence to stay on land six weeks, and let it not trouble you if your occasions ask farther time; for the law in this point is not precise. Bacon.

Let us descend from this top

Of speculation; for the hour precise

Exacts our parting. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In human action, there are no degrees and precise natural limits described, but a latitude is indulged. Taylor.

The reasonings must be precise, though the practice may admit of great latitude. Arbutnot.

The precise difference between a compound and collective idea is this, that a compound idea unites things of a different kind, but a collective, things of the same kind. Watts.

2. Formal; finical; solemnly and superstitiously exact.

The gallery of the wits in King Charles the Second's reign, upon every thing which they called precise, was carried to so great an extravagance, that it almost put all Christianity out of countenance. Adison.

PRECISELY. adv. [from precise.]

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

Doth it fall out, that all things in the church, from the greatest to the least, are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hobbes.

When the Lord had once precisely set down a sum of executing that wherein we are to serve him, the fault appeareth greater to do that which we are not, than not to do that which we are commanded. Hobbes.

He knows,

He cannot so precisely weed this land

As his misdoubts present occasion,

His foes are so entooted with his friends. Shakspeare.

Where more of these orders than one shall be let in several stories, there must be an exquisite care to place the columns precisely one over another. Wotton's Architecture.

In his tract my wary feet have kept,
His undeviled ways precisely kept. Sandys.

The rule, to find the age of the moon, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and of the moon. Holler.

Measuring the diameter of the fifth dark circle, I found it the fifth part of an inch precisely. Newton's Opticks.

2. With superstitious formality; with too much scrupulosity; with troublesome ceremony.

PRECISENESS. n. s. [from precise.] Exactness; rigid nicety.

I will distinguish the cases; though give me leave, in the shuffling of them, not to serve them with too much preciseness. Bacon.

When you have fixed proper hours for particular studies, keep to them, not with a superstitious preciseness, but with some good degree of a regular constancy. Watts.

PRECISIAN. n. s. [from precise.]

Though love use reason for his precisian, he admit him not for his counsellor. Shakspeare.

2. One who is superstitiously rigorous.

These men, for all the world, like our precisians be, who for some cross or fault they in the windows see, will pluck down all the church. Dryden.

A profane person calls a man of piety a precisian. Watts.

PRECISION. n. s. [precision, Fr.] Exact limitation.

He that thinks of being in general, thinks never of any particular species of being; unless he can think of it with and without precision at the same time. Locke.

I have left out the utmost preciseness of fractions in these computations as not necessary, these whole numbers shewing well enough the difference of the value of guineas. Locke.

I was unable to treat this part more in detail, without sacrificing perspicuity to ornament, without wandering from the precision or breaking the chain of reasoning. Pope.

PRECISIVE. adj. [from precisus, Latin.]

Exactly limiting, by cutting off all that is not absolutely relative to the present purpose.

Precise abstraction is when we consider those things apart, which cannot really exist apart; as when we consider mode, without considering its substance or subject. Watts.

TO PRECLUDE. v. a. [preclude, Latin.]

To shut out or hinder by some anticipation.

This much will obviate and preclude the objections of our adversaries, that we do not determine the final cause of the systematical parts of the world, merely as they have respect to the exigencies or conveniences of life. Bentley.

If you once allow them such an acceptance of chance, you have precluded yourself from any more reasoning against them. Bentley.

I fear there will be no way left to tell you, that I entirely esteem you; none but that which no bills can preclude, and no king can prevent. Pope.

PRECIOUS. adj. [precotus, Latin; precise, Fr.]

Ripe before the time.

Many precious trees, and such as have their spring in the winter, may be sown in most parts. Brown.

PRECOCITY. n. s. [from precocious.]

Ripeness before the time.

Some impute the cause of his fall to a precocity of spirit and valour in him; and that therefore some infectious southern air did blast him. Newell.

TO PRECOCITATE. v. a. [precogito, Latin.]

To consider or scheme beforehand.

PRECOGNITION. n. s. [præ and gnitio, Latin.]

Previous knowledge; antecedent examination.

PRECONEIT. n. s. [præ and conceit.]

An opinion previously formed.

A thing in reason impossible, which notwithstanding through their misfashioned preconception, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures. Blount.

TO PRECONCEIVE. v. a. [præ and conceive.]

To form an opinion beforehand; to imagine beforehand.

In a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath preconceived it shorter than the truth; Blount.

truth; and the frustrations of that maketh it seem so.

Fondness of preconceived opinions is not like to render your reports suspect, nor for want of care, defective. Glanville.

The reason why men are so weak in governing is, because most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends, but they are forced to comply subsequently. Smith.

PRECONCEPTION. n. f. [præ and conception.] Opinion previously formed.

Custom with most men prevails more than truth, according to the notions and preconceptions, which it hath formed in our minds, we thrust the discourse of reason itself. Hale.

PRECONTRACT. n. f. [præ and contract.] This was formerly accented on the last syllable. A contract previous to another.

He is your husband on a precontract; 'To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin. Shakspeare.

PRECONTRACT. v. a. [præ and contract.] To contract or bargain beforehand.

Some are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be unmarried, because they are already precontracted to some other; or else are in too near a degree of affinity or consanguinity. Hydell.

PRECURSE. n. f. [from præcurro, Latin.] Forerunning.

The like precursus of fierce events, As harbingers, preceding still the fates, And prologue to the omen coming on, Have heaven and earth together demonstrated. Shakspeare.

PRECURSOR. n. f. [præcursor, Lat. precursus, Fr.] Forerunner; harbinger.

Jove's lightnings, the precursors Of dreadful thunder claps, more momentary Were not. Shakspeare's Tempest.

This contagion might have been prelagged upon consideration of its precursors, viz. a rude winter, and a cloie, sulphurous and fiery air. Harvey.

Thomas Burnet played the precursor to the coming of Homer in his Homericus. Pope.

PREDACIOUS. adj. [from præda, Latin.] Living by prey.

As those are endowed with poison, because they are predacious; so these need it not, because their food is near at hand, and may be obtained without contest. Derham.

PREDAL. adj. [from præda, Lat.] Robbing; practising plunder. This word is not countenanced by analogy.

Sarmatia, laid by predal rapine low, Mournd the hard yoke, and sought relief in vain. Sa. Boyse.

Having preddestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself. Ephesians.

TO PREDDESTINATE. v. n. To hold preddestination. In ludicrous language.

His rust crest he rears, And picks up his preddestinating ears. Dryden.

PREDDESTINATION. n. f. [preddestination, French; from preddestinate.] Fatal decree; pre-ordination.

Preddestination we can difference no otherwise from providence and prescience, than this, that prescience only foretells, providence foretells and careth for, and hath respect to all creatures, and preddestination is only of men; and yet not of all to men belonging, but of their salvation properly in the common use of divines; or perdition, as some have used it. Raleigh's History of the World.

Nor can they justly accuse Their Maker, or their making, or their fate; As if preddestination over-rul'd Their will, dispos'd by absolute decree, Or high fore-knowledge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

PREDDESTINATOR. n. f. [from preddestinate.] One that holds preddestination or the prevalence of pre-established necessity.

Me, mine example let the Stoicks use, Their sad and cruel doctrine to maintain; Let all preddestinate me produce, Who struggle with eternal fate in vain. Gray.

TO PREDDESTINE. v. a. [præ and destine.] To decree beforehand.

Ye careful angels, whom eternal fate Ordains on earth and human acts to wait, Who turn with secret pow'r this restless ball, And bid preddestinate empires rise and fall. Prior.

PREDETERMINATION. n. f. [predetermination, French; præ and determination.] Determination made beforehand.

'This predetermination of God's own will is so far from being the determining of ours, that it is distinctly the contrary; for supposing God to predetermine that I shall act freely, 'tis certain from thence, that my will is free in respect of God, and not predetermined. Stimmond's Fundamentals.

The truth of the catholick doctrine of all ages, in points of predetermination and irresistibility, stands in opposition to the Calvinists. Stimmond.

TO PREDETERMINE. v. a. [præ and determine.] To doom or confine by previous decree.

We fix in brutus certain sensible instincts antecedent to their imaginative faculty, whereby they are predetermined to the convenience of the sensible life. Hale.

PREDIAL. adj. [pradium, Latin.] Consisting of farms.

By the civil law, their predial estates are liable to fiscal payments and taxes, as not being appropriated for the service of divine worship, but for profane uses. Hydell.

PREDICABLE. adj. [predicabile, French; predicabilis, Latin.] Such as may be affirmed of something.

PREDICABLE. n. f. [predicabile, Latin.] A logical term, denoting one of the five things which can be affirmed of any thing.

These they call the five predicables; because every thing that is affirmed concerning any being, must be the genus, species, difference, some property or accident. Watts.

PREDICAMENT. n. f. [predicament, French; predicamentum, Latin.]

1. A class or arrangement of beings or substances ranked according to their natures: called also catagorema or category.

If there were nothing but bodies to be ranked by them in the predicament of place, then that description would be allowed by them as sufficient. Digby or Bulwer.

2. Class or kind described by any definitive marks.

The offender's life lies in the mercy Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice; In which predicament I say thou stand'st. Shakspeare.

I shew the line and the predicament, Wherein you range under this lubber king. Shakspeare.

PREDICAMENTAL. adj. [from predicament.] Relating to predicaments.

PREDICANT. n. f. [predicans, Latin.] One that affirms any thing.

TO PREDICATE. v. a. [predico, Lat.] To affirm any thing of another thing.

All propositions, wherein a part of the complex idea, which any term stands for, is predicated of that term, are only verbal, e. g. to say that gold is a metal. Locke.

TO PREDICATE. v. n. To affirm; to comprise an affirmation.

It were a presumption to think, that any thing in any created nature can bear any perfect resemblance of the incomprehensible perfection of the divine nature, very being itself not predicating univocally touching him and any created being. Hale.

PREDICATE. n. f. [predicatum, Latin.] That which is affirmed or denied of the subject, as, man is rational; man is not immortal.

The predicate is that which is affirmed or denied of the subject. Watts's Logic.

PREDICATION. n. f. [predicatio, Latin; from predicare.] Affirmation concerning any thing.

Let us reason from them as well as we can; they are only about identical predications and influence. Locke.

TO PREDICT. v. a. [predicere, Latin; predire, Fr.] To foretell; to foreshow.

He is always inveighing against such unequal distributions, nor does he ever cease to predict public ruins, till his private antequated.

PREDICTION. n. f. [predictio, Latin; prediction, Fr. from predict.] Prophecy; declaration of something future.

These

These predictions

Are to the world in general, as to Caesar. Shakspeare.
The predictions of cold and long winters, hot and of summers, are good to be known. Bacon.

How soon hath thy prediction, I feel blest!
Mankind this transient world the race of time,
I'll time stand fix'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In Christ they meet with an invincible evidence, as if they were not predictions, but after-relations; and the penmen of them not prophets but evangelists. Swift.

He, who prophesied the best,
Approves the judgment to the rest;
He'd rather choose that I should die,
Than his prediction prove a lie. Swift's Apology.

PREDICTOR. n. f. [from predict.] Fore-teller.

Whether he has not been the cause of this poor man's death, as well as the predictor, may be disputed. Swift.

PREDIGESTION. n. f. [præ and digest-
tion] Digestion too soon performed.

Predigestion, or hasty digestion, fills the body full of crudities and seeds of diseases. Bacon's Essays.

TO PREDISPOSE. v. a. [præ and dispos- se] To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

Vegetable productions require heat of the sun,
to predispose, and excite the earth and the seeds.

Unless nature be predisposed to friendship by its own propensity, no acts of obligation shall be able to abate the secret hatreds of some persons towards others. South.

PREDISPOSITION. n. f. [præ and dis- position] Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

The disease was conceived to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; so as it is no marvel if they alter the spirits, considering that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

External accidents are often the occasional cause of the king's evil; but they suppose a predisposition of the body. W. Jewan.

PREDOMINANCE. n. f. [præ and domina- re] PREDOMINANCY. n. f. [præ and domina-
re] Lat.] Prevalence; superiority; ascendancy; superior influence.

We make guilty of our disasters, the sun, the moon, and the stars, as if we were knaves, thieves, and treachers by spherical predominance. Shakspeare.

An inflammation consists only of a sanguineous affluxion, or else is denominable from other humour, according to the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or cholera. Brown.

In human bodies, there is an incessant warfare amongst the humours for predominance. Hewel.

The true subject of the Phylarch's belief of Christ's doctrine, was the predominance of their covetousness and ambition over their will. South.

The several rays in white light do retain their colorine quantities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do, by their excess and predominance, cause their proper colour to appear. Newton.

PREDOMINANT. adj. [predominant, Fr.
præ and dominor, Latin.] Prevalent;
supreme in influence; ascendent.

Miserable was the condition of that church, the weighty affairs of which should be ordered by those deliberations, wherein such an humour as this was predominant. Hooker.

Love and information is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness's land. Shakspeare.

It is a planet, that will strike

Where it is predominant; and is powerful. Shakspeare.

Those hel's were outweighed by things that made against him, and were predominant in the king's mind. Bacon.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth; or earth rise on the sun. Milton.
I could show you several pieces, where the beauties of this kind are so predominant, that you could never be able to read or understand them.

TO PREDOMINATE. v. n. [predominare, French; præ and dominor, Lat.] To prevail; to be ascendent; to be supreme in influence.

So much did love to her executed lord
Predominate in this fair lady's heart. Daniel.

The gods formed women's souls out of these principles which compose several kinds of animals, and their good or bad disposition arises, according as such and such principles predominate in their constitutions. Addison.

The rays, reflected least obliquely, may predominate over the rest, so much as to cause a heap of such particles to appear very intensely of their colour. Newton's Opticks.

Where judgment is at a loss to determine the choice of a lady who has several lovers, fancy may the more allowably predominate. Clarissa.

TO PREELECT. v. a. [præ and elect.]
To chuse by previous decision.

PREEMINENCE. n. f. [preeminence, Fr.
præ and eminence] It is sometimes written, to avoid the junction of ce, preemi- nence].

1. Superiority of excellence.

I plead for the preeminence of epic poetry. Dryden.

Let profit have the preeminence of honour in the end of poetry; pleasure, though but the second in degree, is the first in favour. Dryden.

It is a greater preeminence to have life, than to have without it; to have life and sense, than to have life only; to have life, sense, and reason, than to have only life and sense. Wilkins.

The preeminence of christianity to any other religious scheme which preceded it, appears from this, that the most eminent among the Pagan philosophers disclaimed many of those superfluous follies which are condemned by revealed religion.
Addison.

2. Precedence; priority of place.

His lance brought him captives to the triumph of Arctur's beauty, such as, though Andria be amongst the fairest, yet in that company were to have the preeminence. Sidney.

He courted as a special preeminence of Junius and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preeminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shakspeare's King Lear.

The English desired no preeminence, but offered equality both in liberty and privilege, and in capacity of offices and employments. Hayward.

Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,
Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares?
Painful preeminence! Addison's Cato.

3. Superiority of power or influence.

That which standeth on record, hath preeminence above that which passeth from hand to hand, and hath no pens but the tongues, no book but the ears of men. Hooker.

Beyond the equator, the Southern point of the needle is sovereign, and the North submits his pre-eminence. Brown.

PREMINENT. adj. [preminent, French;
præ and eminent] Excellent above
others.

Tell how came I here? by some great maker
In goodness and in power preminent. Milton.

We claim a proper interest above others, in the preminent rights of the household of faith. Spratt.

PREEMPTION. n. f. [præemptio, Latin.]

The right of purchasing before another.

Certain persons, in the reigns of king Edward VI. and queen Mary, sought to make use of this preemption, but, trold in the prosecution, of defeated in their expectation, gave it over. Carrey.

TO PREENGAGE. v. a. [præ and en- gage] To engage by precedent ties or contracts.

To Cyprius by his friends his suit he mov'd,
But he was preengag'd by former ties. Dryden.

Not only made an instrument;

But preengag'd without my own consent. Dryden.

The world has the unhappy advantage of pre-engaging our passions, at a time when we have not reflection enough to look beyond the instrument to the hand whose direction it obeys. Rogers's Sonnet.

PREENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from preen- gage] Precedent obligation.

My preengagements to other themes were not unknown to those for whom I was to write. Boyle.

The opinions, suited to their respective tempers, will make way to their assent, in spite of accidental preengagements. Glanville.

Men are apt to think, that those obediences they pay to God shall, like a preengagement, disannul all after-contracts made by guilt. Dicey's Piety.

As far as opportunity and former preengagements will give leave. Cocher of Friendship.

TO PREEN. v. a. [præ and en- gagere, Dutch, to dress or prank up.] To trim the feathers of birds, to enable them to glide through the air: for this use nature has furnished them with two peculiar glands, which secrete an unctuous matter into a perforated oil bag, out of which the bird draws it with its bill. Bailey.

TO PREESTABLISH. v. a. [præ and establishe] To settle beforehand.

PREESTABLISHMENT. n. f. [from pre- establishe] Settlement beforehand.

TO PREEXIST. v. a. [præ and exista- re, Lat.] To exist beforehand.

If thy preexisting soul

Was form'd at first with myriad more,

It did through all the mighty poet roll. Dryden.

PREEXISTENCE. n. f. [preexistence, Fr.
from preexist.]

1. Existence before.

Wisdom declares her antiquity and preexistence to all the works of this earth. Emmet.

2. Existence of the soul before its union with the body.

As Simonde has exposed the vicious part of women, from the doctrine of preexistence; some of the ancient philosophers have satirized the vicious part of the human species, from a notion of the soul's preexistence. Addison.

PREEXISTENT. adj. [preexistent, French;
præ and existent] Existing beforehand;
preceding in existence.

Artificial things could not be from eternity, because they suppose man, by whose art they were made, preexistent to them, the workman must be before the work. Emmet.

Blind to former, as to future fate,
What mortal knows his preexistent state? Pope.

If this preexistent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, then some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley.

PREFACE. n. f. [preface, French; præ- fatia, Latin.] Something spoken in-troduutory to the main design; introduction; something preomial.

This superficial tale

Is but a preface to her worthy praise. Shakspeare.

Sir Thomas More betrayed his depth of judgment in state affairs in his Utopia, than which, in the opinion of Budæus in a preface before it, our age hath not seen a thing more deep. Prædium.

Heav'n's high behest no preface needs. Milton.

TO PREFACE. v. n. [prefari, Lat.] To say something introductory.

Before I enter upon the particular parts of her character, it is necessary to preface, that she is the only child of a decrepit father. Spectator.

TO PREFACE. v. a.

1. To introduce by something proemial.

Wherefoe'er he gave an admonition, he prefaced it always with such demonstrations of tenderness. Fell.

Thou art rash, And must be prefaced into government. Southen.

2. To face; to cover. A ludicrous sense. I love to wear clothes that are flush, Not prefacing old rags with plush. Glendland.

PREFACER. n. f. [from preface.] The writer of a preface.

If there be not a tolerable line in all these six, the prefacer gave me no occasion to write better. Dryden.

PREFATORY. adj. [from preface.] Introductory.

If this proposition, whosoever will be saved, be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, the christians, then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ: after all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed. Dryden.

PREFECT. n. f. [praefectus, Lat.] Governor; commander.

He is much The better soldier, having been a tribune, Præfæct, lieutenant, prætor in the war. Ben Jonson. It was the custom in the Roman empire, for the praefects and viceroys of distant provinces to transmit a relation of every thing remarkable in their administration. Addison.

PREFECTURE. n. f. [praefectura, French; praefectura, Lat.] Command; office of government.

7. To offer solemnly; to propose publicly; to exhibit.

They flatly disavouch To yield him more obedience or support; And as t' a perjur'd duke of Lancaster, Their cartel of defiance they prefer. Daniel. I, when my foist began to faint, My vows and prayers to thee preferred; The Lord my passionate complaint, Even from his holy temple, heard. Sundys.

Prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments, since the conquest; and if that won't do, challenge the crown and the two houses, Collier.

Take care, Left thou prefer so rash a pray'r; Nor vainly hope the queen of love Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prin.

Every person within the church or commonwealth may prefer an accusation, that the delinquent may suffer condign punishment. Ayliffe.

PREFERABLE. adj. [preferable, French; from prefer.] Eligible before something else. -With to commonly before the thing refused.

The stronger ties we have to an unalterable pursuit of happiness, which is greatest good, the more are we free from any necessary compliance with our desire, set upon any particular, and then appearing preferable good, till we have duly examined it. Locke.

Though it be incumbent on parents to provide for their children, yet this debt to their children does not quite cancel the score due to their parents; but only is made by nature preferable to it. Locke.

Almost every man in our nation is a politician, and hath a scheme of his own, which he thinks preferable to that of any other. Addison.

Even in such a state as this, the pleasures of virtue would be superior to those of vice, and justly preferable. Atterbury.

PREFERABLENESS. n. f. [from preferable.] The state of being preferable.

PREFERABLY. adv. [from preferable.]

In preference; in such a manner as to prefer one thing to another.

How came he to chuse a comick preferably to the tragick poets; or how comes he to chuse Plautus preferably to Terence? Dennis.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [preferentia, French; from prefer.]

1. The act of preferring; estimation of one thing above another; election of one rather than another.

It gives as much due to good works, as is consistent with the grace of the gospel; it gives as much preference to divine grace, as is consistent with the precepts of the gospel. Spratt.

Leave the critics on either side, to contend about the preference due to this or that sort of poetry. Dryden.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or to bear several actions of our minds and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind, ordering the doing, or not doing such a particular action. Locke.

The several musical instruments in the hands of the Apollos, Muses, and Fauns, might give light to the dispute for preference between the ancient and modern musick. Addison.

A secret pleasure touch'd Athena's soul, To see the preference due to sacred age.

Regarded. Pope's Odyssey.

The Romanists were used to value the latter equally with the former, or even to give them the preference. Waterland.

2. With to before the thing postponed.

This passes with his sof. admirers, and gives him the preference to Virgil. Dryden.

It directs one, in preference to, or with neglect of the other, and thereby either the continuation or change becomes voluntary. Locke.

3. With above.

I shall give an account of some of those appropriate and discriminating notices wherein the human body differs, and hath preference above the most perfect brutal nature. Hall.

4. With before.

Here is evident the visible discrimination between the human nature, and its preference before it. Hall.

5. With over.

The knowledge of things alone gives a value to our reasonings, and preference to one man's knowledge over another. Locke.

PREFERENCE. n. f. [from prefer.]

1. Advancement to a higher station.

I'll move the king

To any shape of thy preference, such

As thou'lt desire. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If you hear of that blind traitor,

Preference falls on him that cuts him off. Shakespeare.

Princes must, by a vigorous exercise of that law, make it every man's interest and honour to cultivate religion and virtue, by rendering vice a disgrace, and the certain ruin to preference or pretensions. Swift.

2. A place of honour or profit.

All preferences should be placed upon fit men. L'Estrange.

The mercenary and inconstant crew of the hunters after preference, whose designs are always seen through. Dowdant.

3. Preference; act of preferring. Not in use.

All which declare a natural preference of the one unto the motion before the other. Brown.

PREFERER. n. f. [from prefer.] One who prefers.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Latin.] To shew by an antecedent representation.

PREFIGURATION. n. f. [from prefigure.] Antecedent representation.

The same providence that hath wrought the one, will work the other; the former being pledges, as well as prefigurations of the latter. Barnes.

The variety of prophecies and prefigurations had their punctual accomplishment in the author of this institution. Noëris.

TO PREFIGURE. v. a. [præ and figuro, Latin.] To exhibit by antecedent representation.

What the Old Testament hath, the very same the New containeth; but that which lieth there, as under a shadow, is here brought forth into the open sun; things there prefigured, are here performed. Hooker.

Such piety, so chaste use of God's day, That what we turn to feast, the turn'd to pray, And did prefigure here in devout taste,

The rest of her high sabbath, which shall last. Dennis.

If shame superadded to loss, and both met together, as the sinners portion here, perfectly prefiguring the two saddest ingredients in hell, deprivation of the blisful vision, and confusion of face, cannot prove efficacious to the mortifying of vice, the church doth give over the patient. Hammond.

TO PREFINE. v. a. [præfinir, French; præfinio, Latin.] To limit beforehand.

He, in his immoderate desires, prefined unto himself three years, which the great monarchs of Rome could not perform in so many hundreds. Knolles.

TO PREFIX. v. a. [præfigo, Latin.]

1. To appoint beforehand.

At the prefixed hour of her awaking, Came I to take her from her kindred's vault. Shelley.

A time prefix, and think of me at Lill' Santia. Its inundation constantly increaseth the seventh day of June; wherein a larger form of speech were safer, than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day. Brown.

Booth's forward valour only serv'd to show, He durst that duty pay we all did owe;

The attempt was fair; but heaven's prefixed hour Not come. Dryden.

2. To settle; to establish.

Because I would prefix some certain boundary between them, the old statutes and with king Edward II. the new or later statutes begun with king Edward III. Hall's Laws of England.

These boundaries of species are as men, and not as nature makes them, if there are in nature any such prefixed bounds. Locke.

3. To

3. To put before another thing: as, he prefixed an advertisement to his book.

PREFIX. n. f. [præfixum, Latin.] Some particle put before a word, to vary its signification.

In the Hebrew language the noun has its præfixa and affixæ, the former to signify some few relations, and the latter to denote the pronouns possessive and relative. Clarke.

It is a præfix of augmentation to many words in that language. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

PREFIXION. n. f. [præfixion, French; from præfix.] The act of prefixing. Diſt.

TO PREFORM. v. a. [præ and form.] To form beforehand. Not in use.

If you consider the true cause, Why all these things change, from their ordinance Their natures and performed faculties, To monstrous quality: why you shall find, That heav'n made them instruments of fear Unto some monstrous state. Shakspeare. Julius Caesar.

PREGNANCY. n. f. [from pregnant.]

1. The state of being with young.

The breast is encompassed with ribs, and the belly left free, for respiration; and in females, for that extraordinary extension in the time of their pregnancy. Ray on the Creation.

2. Fertility; fruitfulness; inventive power; acuteness.

He was sent to school, where his pregnancy was advantaged by more than paternal care and industry. Fell.

Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit waited in giving reckonings. Shakspeare.

This writer, out of the pregnancy of his invention, hath found out an old way of insinuating the grossest reflections under the appearance of admonitions. Swift's Miscellanies.

PREGNANT. adj. [Pregnant, French; prægnans, Latin.]

1. Teeming; breeding.

Dove-like soft blood'ing on the vast abyss, And mad'd it pregnant. Milton.

His town, as fame reports, was built of old By Danae, pregnant with almighty gold. Johnson.

Through ether ocean, foolish man! That pregnant word sent forth again, Might to a world extend each atom there, For every drop call forth a sea, a heav'n for every star. Prior.

2. Fruitful; fertile; impregnating.

All these in their pregnant causes mixt. Milton.
Call the floods from high, to rush again,
With pregnant streams, to swell the teeming gain. Dryden.

3. Full of consequence.

These knew not the just motives and pregnant grounds, with which I thought myself furnished. King Charles.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward's Natural Hist.
O detestable passive obedience! did I ever imagine I should become thy votary in so pregnant an instance? Arbutnot.

4. Evident; plain; clear; full. An obsolete sense.

This granted, as it is a most pregnant and unfavour'd position, who stands so eminent in the degree of this fortune as Cassio, a knave very voluble? Shakspeare's Othello.

Were't not that we stand up against them all, 'Twere pregnant, should square between themselves. Shakspeare.

5. Easy to produce any thing.

A most poor man made time to fortune's blows, Who by the aid of known and feeling sorrows, Is pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare. King Lear.

Free; kind. Obsolete.
My matter hath no voice, but to your own most pregnant and vouchsafed ears. Shakspeare.

PREGNANTLY. adv. [from pregnant.]

1. Fruitfully.

2. Fully; plainly; clearly.

A thousand moral paintings I can show, That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fortune More pregnantly than words. Shakspeare's Titus.

The dignity of this office among the Jews is so pregnantly set forth in holy writ, that it is unquestionable; kings and priests are mentioned together. South.

PREGUSTATION. n. f. [præ and gusto, Latin.] The act of tasting before another.

TO PREJUDGE. v. a. [prejurer, Fr. præ and judico, Latin.] To determine any question beforehand; generally to condemn beforehand.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned in parliament, and prejudged in the common opinion of the realm, and that it tended to the dishonour of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The child was strong and able, though born in the eighth month, which the physicians do prejudge. Bacon.

The cause is not to be defended, or patronized by names, but arguments, much less to be prejudged, or blatted by them. Hammond.

The committee of council hath prejudged the whole case, by calling the united senate of both houses of parliament an universal clamour. Swift.

Some action ought to be entered, lest a greater cause should be injured and prejudged thereby. Dyall.

TO PREJUDICATE. v. a. [præ and judico, Latin.] To determine beforehand to disadvantage.

Our dearest friend Prejudicates the business, and would seem To have us make denial. Shakspeare.

Are you, in favour of his person, bent Thus to prejudicate the innocent? Sandys.

PREJUDICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by prejudice; formed before examination.

This rule of casting away all our former prejudicate opinions, is not proposed to any of us to be practised at once as subjects or christians, but merely as philosophers. Watts.

2. Prejudiced: prepossessed by opinions.

Then words will be embraced by most that understand them, and their reasons enforce belief from prejudicate readers. Brown.

PREJUDICATION. n. f. [from prejudicate.] The act of judging without examination.

PREJUDICE. n. f. [prejudice, Fr. præjudicium, Latin.]

1. Prepossession; judgment formed beforehand without examination. It is used for prepossession in favour of any thing or against it. It is sometimes used with to before that which the prejudice is against, but not properly.

The king himself frequently considered more the person who spoke, as he was in his prejudice, than the counsel itself that was given. Clarendon.

My comfort is, that their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority. Dryden.

There is an unaccountable prejudice to projectors of all kinds, for which reason, when I talk of practising to fly, silly people think me an owl for my pains. Addison.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt; injury. This sense is only accidental or consequential; a bad thing being called a prejudice, only because prejudice is commonly a bad thing, and is not derived from the original or etymology of the word: it were therefore better to use it less: perhaps prejudice ought never to be applied to any mischief, which does not imply some partiality or prepossession. In some of the following examples, its propriety will be discovered.

I have not spoke one the least word, That might be prejudice of her present state, Or touch of her good person. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice; for from this league Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakspeare.

Factions carried too high and too violently, is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice of their authority and business. Bacon.

How plain this abuse is, and what prejudice it does to the understanding of the sacred scriptures. Locke.

A prince of this character will instruct us by his example, to fix the unsteadiness of our politics; or by his conduct hinder it from doing us any prejudice. Addison.

TO PREJUDICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prepossess with unexamined opinions; to fill with prejudices.

Halt pillars wanted their expected height, And roots imperfect prejudic'd the sight. Prior.

Suffer not any beloved study to prejudice your mind, so far as to dispute all other learning. Watts.

2. To obstruct or injure by prejudices previously raised.

Companies of learned men, be they never so great and reverend, are to yield unto reason, the weight whereof is no whit prejudic'd by the simplicity of his person, which doth allege it. Hobbes.

Neither must his example, done without the book, prejudice that which is well appointed in the book. White.

I am not to prejudice the cause of my fellow-ports, though I abandon my own defence. Dryden.

3. To injure; to hurt; to diminish; to impair; to be detrimental to. This sense, as in the noun, is often improperly extended to meanings that have no relation to the original sense; who can read with patience of an ingredient that prejudices a medicine?

The strength of that law is such, that no particular nation can lawfully prejudice the same by any their several laws and ordinances, more than a man by his private resolutions, the law of the whole commonwealth wherein he liveth. Hobbes.

The Danube rescu'd, and the empire sav'd, Say, is the majesty of verse retriev'd? And would it prejudice thy softer vein,

To sing the princes, Louis and Eugene? Prior.

To this is added a vinous bitter, warmer in the composition of its ingredients than the watry infusion; and, as gentian and lemon-peel make a bitter of so grateful a flavour, the only care required in this composition was to chuse such an addition as might not prejudice it. London Dispensatory.

PREJUDICIAL. adj. [prejudicial, Fr. from prejudice.]

1. Obstructed by means of opposite prepossessions.

'Tis a sad irreverence, without due consideration to look upon the actions of princes with a prejudicial eye. Hayday.

2. Contrary; opposite.

What one syllable is there, in all this, prejudicial any way to that which we hold? Hobbes.

3. Mischievous; hurtful; injurious; detrimental. This sense is improper. See PREJUDICE, noun and verb.

His going away the next morning with all his troops, was most prejudicial and most ruinous to the king's affairs. Clarendon.

One of the young ladies reads, while the others are at work; so that the learning of the family is not at all prejudicial to its manufactures. Addison.

A state of great prosperity, as it exposes us to various temptations, so it is often prejudicial to us, in that it swells the mind with undue thoughts. Atterbury.

PREJUDICIALNESS. n. f. [from prejudicial.] The state of being prejudicial; mischievousness.

PRELACY. n. f. [from prelate.]

1. The dignity or post of a prelate or ecclesiastick of the highest order.

Prelacies may be termed the greater benefices, as that of the pontificate, a patriarchship, an archbishoprick and bishoprick. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. Episcopacy; the order of bishops.

The presbyter, puff'd up with spiritual pride, Shall on the necks of the lewd nobles ride, His brethren damn, the civil power defy, And parcel out republick prelacy. Dryden.

How many are there, that call themselves protestants, who put prelacy and popery together as terms convertible? Swift.

3. Bishops. Collectively.

Divers of the reverend prelacy, and other most judicious men, have especially bestowed their pains about the matter of jurisdiction. Hooker's Dedication.

PRELATE. n. f. [prelat, French; prælat, Latin.] An ecclesiastick of the highest order and dignity.

It belongeth not the person of so grave a prelate, to be either utterly without counsel, as the ist were, or in a common perplexity to shew himself alone secure. Hooker.

Hear him but reason in divinity, And, all-admiring, with an inward wish You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakespeare.

The archbishop of Vienna, a reverend prelate, said one day to king Lewis XI. of France; Sir, your mortal enemy is dead, what time duke Charles of Burgundy was slain. Bacon.

Yet Munster's prelate ever be accurst, In whom we seek the German faith in vain. Dryden.

PRELATICAL. adj. [from prelate.] Relating to prelates or prelacy. Diſt.

PRELATION. n. f. [prælat, Lat.] Preference; setting of one above the other.

In case the father left only daughters, they equally succeeded as in co partnership, without any prelation or preference of the eldest daughter to a double portion. Hale.

PRELATURE. } n. f. [prælat, Latin;
PRELATURSHIP. } Latin; prælat, Fr.] The state or dignity of a prelate. Diſt.

He that is desirous to prosecute these prælectations of Faber, let him resort to the prælection of Faber. Hale.

PRELIBATION. n. f. [from prælibo, Lat.] Taste beforehand; effusion previous to tasting.

The firm belief of this, in an innocent soul, is a high prælibation of those eternal joys. Mare.

PRELIMINARY. adj. [preliminaire, Fr. prælimine, Latin.] Previous; introductory; proemial.

My master needed not the assistance of that preliminary poet to prove his claim; his own majestic mien discovers him to be the king. Dryden.

PRELIMINARY. n. f. Something previous; preparatory act; preparation; preparative.

The third consists of the ceremonies of the oath on both sides, and the præliminaries to the combat. Notes on Iliad.

PRELUDE. n. f. [prelude, French; præludium, Latin.]

1. Some short flight of musick played before a full concert.

My weak essay

But sounds a prelude, and points out their prey. Young.

2. Something introductory; something that only shews what is to follow.

To his infant arms oppose

His father's rebels and his brother's foes;

Those were the præludes of his fate,

That form'd his manhood, to subdue

The lydia of the many headed hissing crew. Dryden.

The last Georgick was a good prelude to the Aneis, and very well shew'd what the poet could do in the description of what was really great. Addison.

One concession to a man is but a prelude to another. Clarissa.

TO PRELUDE. v. a. [præluder, French; præludo, Latin.] To serve as an introduction; to be previous to.

Either sooner holding out their throats, And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes, As if all day, preluding to the fight, They only had rehears'd, to sing by night. Dryden.

PRELUDIOUS. adj. [from prelude.] Previous; introductory.

That's but a præludious blife,

Two souls peckering in a kiss. Clarendon.

Prælusive drops, let all their moisture flow. Thomson.

PREMATU'RE. adj. [premature, Fr. præmaturus, Latin.] Ripe too soon; formed before the time; too early; too soon said, believed, or done; too hasty.

'Tis hard to imagine, what possible consideration should persuade him to repent, till he deposited that premature persuasion of his being in Christ. Hammond's Fundamentals.

PREMATU'RELY. adv. [from premature.] Too early; too soon; with too hasty ripeness.

PREMATU'RENESS. } n. f. [from premature.]
PREMATU'RITY. } ture. Too great haste; unseasonable earliness.

TO PREMEDITATE. v. a. [præmeditor, Latin; præmediter, French.] To contrive or form beforehand; to conceive beforehand.

Where I have come, great clerks have purposed To greet me with præmeditated welcomes. Shakspeare.

With words præmeditated thus he said. Dryden.

TO PREMEDITATE. v. n. To have formed in the mind by previous meditation; to think beforehand.

Of themselves they were rude, and knew not so much as how to præmeditate; the Spirit gave them speech and eloquent utterance. Hooker.

PREMEDITATION. n. f. [præmeditatio, Latin; præmeditation, French; from præmeditare.] Act of meditating beforehand.

Are all th' unlook'd-for issue of their bodies To take their rooms ere I can place myself?

A cold præmeditation for my purpose! Shakspeare.

Hope is a pleasant præmeditation of enjoyment, as when a dog expects, till his master has done picking of the bone. Mare.

He amidst the disadvantage of extempore against præmeditation, dispelled with ease and perfect clearness all the sophisms that had been brought against him. Fell.

Verse is not the effect of sudden thought; but this hinders not, that sudden thought may be represented in verse, since those thoughts must be higher than nature can raise without præmeditation. Dryden in Dramatick Poetry.

TO PREMERE. v. a. [præmereor, Lat.] To deserve before.

They did not forgive Sir John Hotham, who had so much præmerited of them. King Charles.

A charger, yearly filled with fruits, was offered to the gods at their festivals, as the præmices or first gathings. Dryden.

PREMIER. adj. [French.] First; chief.

The Spaniard challengeth the premier place, in regard of his dominions. Cambin's Remains.

Thus families, like realms, with equal fate,

Are sunk by premier minutes of state. Swift.

TO PREMISE. v. a. [præmissus, Latin.]

1. To explain previously; to lay down premises.

The apostle's discourse here is an answer upon a ground taken; he præmises, and then infers. Burton.

I præmise these particulars, that the reader may know I enter upon it as a very ungrateful task. Addison.

2. To send before the time. Not in use.

O let the vile world end,

And the præmised flame, of the last day

Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakspeare.

PRÆMISES. n. f. [præmissa, Latin; præmisses, French.]

1. Propositions antecedently supposed or proved.

They infer upon the præmisses, that as great difference as commodiously may be, there should be in all outward ceremonies between the people of God, and them which are not his people. Hooker.

This is so regular an inference, that whilst the præmisses stand firm, it is impossible to shake the conclusion. Dixey of Poetry.

She study'd well the point, and found Her præmisses were not found,

From præmisses erroneous brought,

And therefore the deduction's nought. Swift's Misc.

2. In low language, houses or lands: as, I was upon the præmisses.

PRÆMISS. n. f. [præmissum, Latin.] Antecedent proposition. This word is rare in the singular.

They know the major or minor, which is implied, when you pronounce the other præmissi and the conclusion. Watts.

PRÆMIUM. n. f. [præmium, Lat.] Something given to invite a loan or a bargain.

No body cares to make loans upon a new project; whereas men never fail to bring in their money upon a land-tax, when the præmium or interest allowed them is suited to the hazard they run. Addison's Freeholder.

People were tempted to lend, by great præmisses and large interest, and it concerned them to preserve that government, which they had trusted with their money. Swift's Miscellaneus.

TO PREMO'NISH. v. a. [præmonere, Latin.] To warn or admonish beforehand.

PREMO'NISHMENT. n. f. [from præmonere.] Previous information.

After these præmonishments, I will come to the competition itself. Warren's Architecture.

PREMONITION. n. f. [from præmonere.] Previous notice; previous intelligence.

What friendly premonitions have been spent
On your forbearance, and their vain event. Chapm.
How great the force of such an erroneous persuasion is, we may collect from our Saviour's pre- monition to his disciples, when he tells them, that those who killed them should think they did God service. Decay of Piety.

PREMONITORY. adj. [from præ and mon- eo, Latin.] Previously advising.

To PREMONSTRATE. v. a. [præ and monstro, Latin.] To shew beforehand.

PREMUNIRE. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A writ in the common law, whereby a penalty is incurable, as infringing some statute.

Premunire is now grown a good word in our English laws, by tract of time; and yet at first it was merely mistaken for premonition.
Bromhall says of Holles.

2. The penalty so incurred.

Woolley married a premunire, forfeited his honour, estate, and life, which he ended in great calamity. South.

3. A difficulty; a distress. A low un-grammatical word.

PREMUNITION. n. f. [from premunio,
Latin.] An anticipation of objection.

To PREMINATE. v. a. [præminio, Latin.] To forename.

He you would found,
Having ever seen, in the premination crimes,
The youth, you breathe of, guilty. Shakspeare.

PREMINATION. n. f. [præ and minio, Latin.] The privilege of being named first.

The watry productions should have the pre- mination; and they of the land rather derive their names, than nominate those of the sea. Brown.

PRENOTION. n. f. [prenotion, French;
præ and nosco, Latin.] Foreknowledge;
prescience.

The hedgehog's prescience of winds is so exact, that it stoppeth the north or southern hole of its nest, according unto prenotion of these winds ensuing. Brown.

PRENTICE. n. f. [contracted, by colloquial licence, from apprentice.] One bound to a master, in order to instruction in a trade.

My accuser is my prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault, he did vow upon his knees
he would be even with me. Shakspeare.

PRENTICESHIP. n. f. [from prentice.]

The servitude of an apprentice.
He sent a prentice, who was up shop,
Ward try'd on puppet, and the poo, his drop.
Pope.

PRENUNCIATION. n. f. [prænuncio, Lat.]

The act of telling before. Dryd.

PREOCCUPANCY. n. f. [from preoccupare.]

The act of taking possession before an other.

To PREOCCUPATE. v. a. [preoccupare, French; præoccupare, Latin.]

1. To anticipate.
Honour ascribeth to death; grief flings to it,
and fear preoccupates it. Bacon.

2. To prepossess; to fill with prepossession. That the model-bee, with a cloying, has the eye preoccupied the bee, yet. Waller.

PREOCCUPATION. n. f. [preoccupation, French; from preoccupare.]

1. Anticipation.
2. Prepossession.
3. Anticipation of objection.
As if, by way of preoccupation, he should have said; well, here you see your compulsion, this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this is your doom, if you decline it. South.

To PREOCCUPY. v. a. To prepossess, to occupy by anticipation or prejudices.

I think it more respectful to the reader to leave something to reflection, than preoccupy his judgment. Arbuthnot.

To PREOMINATE. v. a. [præ and ominor, Latin.] To prognosticate; to shew by omens any future event.

Because many ravens were seen when Alexander entered Babylon, they were thought to preominate his death. Drayton.

PROPOSITION. n. f. [præ and propono, Latin.] Opinion antecedently formed;
prepossession.

Dier holds no solid rule of selection; some, in indistinct vacuity, eating almost any; others, out of a timorous proposition, refraining from very many things. Brown.

To PREORDAIN. v. a. [præ and ordi- nao, Latin.] To ordain beforehand.

Since the constancy to the will of God, and if all things be preordained by God, and so demonstrated to be willed by him, it remains there is no such thing as sin. Hammond.

Few souls preordain'd by fate,
The race of gods have reach'd that envied state.
Religion.

PREORDINANCE. n. f. [præ and ordi- nance.] Antecedent decree; first decree. Not in use.

These lowly courtesies
Might sin the blood of ordain'd men,
And twin preordinance and first decree
Into the law of children. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

PREORDINATION. n. f. [from preordain.]

The act of preordinating.

PREPARATION. n. f. [preparatio, Latin;
preparation, French; from prepare.]

1. The act of preparing or previously fitting any thing to any purpose.

Nothing hath proved more fatal to that due pre- paration for another life, than our unhappy mistake of the nature and end of this. Wicks.

2. Previous measures.
I will shew you preparations there were in nature for this dissolution, and after what manner it came to pass. Burnet.

3. Ceremonious introduction.
I make bold to press, with a little preparation, upon you.

—You're welcome. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

4. The act of making or fitting by a regular process.

In the preparations of cookery, the most volatile parts of vegetables are destroyed. Arbuthnot.

5. Any thing made by process of operation.

I wish the chymists had been more sparing, who magnify their preparations, invigilate the curiosity of many, and delude the security of most.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

6. Accomplishment; qualification. Out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent education, authentick in your place and person, presented for your many warlike, counsellor, and learned preparations. Shakspeare.

PREPARATIVE. adj. [preparatus, Fr. from prepare.] Having the power of preparing or qualifying.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge pre- parative to this work? South.

PREPARATIVE. n. f. [preparatus, Fr. from prepare.]

1. That which has the power of preparing or previously fitting.

They tell us the profit of reading is singular, in that it serveth for a preparative unto sermons.

My book of advancement of learning may be some preparative or key for the better opening of the institution. Bacon.

Resolvedness in sin can, with no reason, be imagined a preparative to remission. Decay of Piety.

Though he judged the time of sickness, an improper season for the great work of repentance; yet he esteemed it a most useful preparative, the voice of God himself exhorting to it. Fell.

Such a temper is a contradiction to repentance, as being founded in the destruction of those qualities, which are the only dispositions and prepara- tives to it. South.

2. That which is done in order to something else.

The miseries, which have ensued, may be yet, through thy mercy, preparatives to us of future blessings. King Charles.

What avail it to make all the necessary pre- paratives for our voyage, if we do not actually begin the journey? Dryden.

PREPARATIVELY. adv. [from prepara- tive.] Previously; by way of preparation.

It is preparatively necessary to many useful things in this life, as to make a man a good physician. Hale.

PREPARATORY. adj. [preparatoire, Fr.]

1. Antecedently necessary.

The practice of all these is proper to our condition in this world, and preparatory to our happiness in the next. Whiston.

2. Introductory; previous; antecedent.

Preparatory, limited and formal interrogatories in writing preclude this way of occasional interrogatories. Hale.

Rams were but preparatory, the violence of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet.

To PREPARE. v. a. [præpare, Latin;
preparer, French.]

1. To fit for any thing; to adjust to any use; to make ready for any purpose.

Patent & Clavia, plough thy visage up
With her prepared nails. Shakspeare. Ant. and Cleop.
Prepare men's hearts by giving them the grace of humility, repentance, and probity of heart.
Hammond.

Confound the peace establish'd, and prepare
Then souls to hatred, and their hands to war. Dryd.

Out soul, not yet prepared for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night. Dryd.

The beams of light had been in vain display'd,
Had not the eye been fit for vision made;
In vain the author had the eye prepared
With so much skill, had not the light appear'd.
Blackmore.

2. To qualify for any purpose.
Some preachers, being prepared only upon two or three points of doctrine, run the same round.
Addison.

3. To make ready beforehand.

There he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation. Psalms cxxv.

Now prepare thee for another sight. Addison.
He took the golden compasses, prepared
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe. Milton.

Cuddled grains are an improver of land, and preparer of it for other crops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

PREPL'NSE. } adj. [prepensus, Latin.]

PREPL'NSFD. } Forethought; preconceived; contrived beforehand; as, malice prepenſe.

To PREPONDER. v. a. [from preponderate.] To outweigh. Not used.

Though pillars by channelling be seemingly ingroined to our sight, yet they are truly weakened; and therefore ought not to be the more slender, but the more corpulent, unless appearances preponder truths. Watson's Architecture.

PREPONDERANCE. } n. f. [from pre-

PREPONDERANCY. } ponderate.] The state of outweighing; superiority of weight.

As to addition of ponderosity in dead bodies, comparing them unto blocks, this occasional preponderancy is rather an appearance than reality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mind should examine all the grounds of probability, and, upon a due balancing the whole, reject or receive proportionably to the preponderancy of the greater grounds of probability. Locke.

Little light boats were the ships which people used, to the sides whereof this fish remora fastening, might make it tawg, as the least preponderance on either side will do, and so retard its course. Grew.

To PREPONDERATE. v. a. [præpondero, Latin.]

1. To outweigh; to overpower by weight.

An inconsiderable weight, by distance from the centre of the balance, will preponderate greater magnitudes. Glauville.

The triviallest thing, when a passion is cast into the scale with it, preponderates substantial blessings. Government of the Tongue.

2. To overpower by stronger influence.

To PREPONDERATE. v. n.

1. To exceed in weight.

That is no just balance, wherein the heaviest side will not preponderate. Wilkins.

He that would make the lighter scale preponderate, will not so soon do it, by adding new weight to the emptier, as if he took out of the heavier, what he adds to the lighter. Locke.

Unless the very mathematical center of gravity of every system be fixed in the very mathematical center of the attractive power of all the rest, they cannot be evenly attracted on all sides, but must preponderate some way or other. Bentley.

2. To exceed in influence or power analogous to weight.

In matters of probability, we cannot be sure that we have all particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, which may outweigh all that at present seems to preponderate with us. Locke.

By putting every argument on one side and the other into the balance we must form a judgment which side preponderates. Watts.

PREPONDERATION. n. f. [from preponderate.] The act or state of outweighing any thing.

In matters, which require present practice, we must content ourselves with a mere preponderation of probable reasons. Watts.

To PRÆPOSE. v. a. [præposer, French; præpono, Lat.] To put before. Dist.

PREPOSITION. n. f. [præposition, French; præpositio, Lat.] In grammar, a particle governing a case.

A preposition signifies some relation, which the thing signified by the word following it, has to something going before in the discourse, as, Cæsar came to Rome. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

She was prepossest with the scandal of salivating. Wifman.

PREPOSSESSION. n. f. [from prepossest.]

1. Preoccupation; first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man to give piety the prepossession, before other competitors should be able to pretend to him, and so to engage him in holiness first, and then in bliss. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Prejudice; preconceived opinion.

Had the poor vulgar rout only, who were held under the prejudices and prepossessions of education, been abused into such idolatrous superstitions, it might have been pitied, but not to much wondered at. South.

With thought from prepossession free, reflect On solar rays, as they the light respect. Blackmore.

PREPOSTEROUS. adj. [præposterous, Latin.]

1. Having that first which ought to be last.

The method I take may be censured as preposterous, because I thus treat last of the antediluvian earth, which was first in order of nature. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Wrong; absurd; perverted.

Put a case of a land of Amazons, where the whole government, publick and private, is in the hands of women. Is not such a preposterous government against the first order of nature, for women to rule over men, and in itself void? Bacon.

Death from a father's hand, from whom I first Received a being 'tis a preposterous gift, An act at which inverted nature starts, And blushes to behold herself so cruel. Denham.

Such is the world's preposterous fate; Amongst all creatures, mortal hate Love, though immortal, doth create. Deut. am.

The Roman missionaries gave their liberal contribution, affording their preposterous charity to make them proselytes, who had no mind to be confessors or martyrs. Fil.

By this distribution of matter, continual provision is every where made for the supply of bodies, quite contrary to the preposterous reasoning of those men, who expected so different a result. Woodward.

3. Applied to persons: Absurd; absurd.

Preposterous as! that never read so far

To know the cause why Musick was ordain'd. Shaksp.

PRÆPOSTEROUSLY. adv. [from præposterous.] In a wrong situation; absurdly.

Those things do best please me,

That befall præposterously. Shaksp. Mid. Night's Dr.

Upon this supposition, one animal would have its lungs where another hath its liver, and all the other members præposterously placed, there could not be a like configuration of parts in any two individuals. Bentley's Sermons.

PRÆPOSTEROUNESS. n. f. [from præposterous.] Absurdity; wrong order or method.

PRÆPOTENCY. n. f. [præpotentia, Lat.]

Superior power; predominance.

If there were a determinate præpotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals. Brown.

PRÆPUCE. n. f. [præpuce, French; præputium, Lat.] That which covers the glans; foreskin.

The præpuce was much inflamed and swelled. Wifman.

Some primary literal signification is prærequir'd to that other of figurative. Hammond.

PRÆREQUISITE. adj. [præ and requisitio.] Something previously necessary.

The conformation of parts is necessary, not only unto the prærequisite and previous conditions of birth, but also unto the parturition. Brown.

Before the existence of compounded body, there must be a preexistence of active principles, necessarily prærequisite to the mixing these particles of bodies. Male.

PRÆROGATIVE. n. f. [prærogative, Fr. prærogativa, low Lat.] An exclusive or peculiar privilege.

My daughters and the fair Parthenia might far better put in their claim for that prærogative. Sidney.

Our prærogative

Calls not your counsels, but our natural goodness imparts this. Shaksp. Hamlet.

How could commonities, The primogeniture, and due of birth, Prærogative of age, sceptres, and crowns,

But by degree stand in authentic place? Shaksp. Hamlet.

The great Caliph hath an old prærogative in the choice and confirmation of the kings of Assyria. Kneller.

They are the best laws, by which the king hath the justest prærogative, and the people the best liberty. Bacon.

Had any of these second causes despoiled God of his prærogative, or had God himself constrained the mind and will of man to impious acts by any celestial enforcements? Religh.

They obtained another royal prærogative and power to make war and peace at their pleasure. Davies.

The house of commons, to these their prærogatives over the lords, sent an order to the lieutenant of the Tower, that he should cause him to be executed that very day. Clarendon.

For freedom still maintain'd alive, Freedom an English subject's sole prærogative, Accept our pious praise. Dryden.

All with the dire prærogative to kill, Ev'n they wou'd have the pow'r, who want the will. Dryden.

It seems to be the prærogative of human understanding, when it has distinguished any ideas, so as to perceive them to be different, to consider in what circumstances they are capable to be compared. Locke.

I will not consider only the prærogatives of man above other animals, but the endowments which nature nature hath conferred on his body in common with them. Ray on the Creation.

PRESBOGATIVE. adj. [from presbogy.] Having an exclusive privilege; having prerogative.

'Tis the plague of great ones,
Presbogy are they less than the base;
'Tis destiny unshunnable. Shakespeare.

Pres. Pres, presb, seem to be derived from the Saxon, preort, a priest; it being usual in after times to drop the letter o in like cases. Giffon's Camden

PRESAGE. n. s. [ presage, French; presagium, Lat. ] Prognostick; presension of futurity.

Joy and shout, presage of victory. Milton.
Dreams, have generally been considered by authors only as revelations of what has already happened, or as presages of what is to happen. Addison.

To PRESAGE. v. a. [ presager, French; presagio, Latin. ]

1. To forbode; to foreknow; to foretell; to prophesy: it seems properly used of internal presension.

Henry's late presaging prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
What pow'r of mind

Foreseeing, or presaging from the depth
Of knowledge past or present, cou'd have fear'd
How such united force of gods, how such As stood like these could ever know repulse? Milton.

This contagion might have been presaged upon consideration of its precursors. Harvey on Consumption.
With'd freedom I presage you soon will find,
If heav'n be just, and if to virtue kind. Dryden.

2. Sometimes with of before the thing foretold.

That by certain signs we may presage
Of heats and rains, and wind's impetuous rage,
The sovereign of the heav'ns has set on high
The moon to mark the changes of the sky. Dryden.

3. To foretoken; to foreshow.

If I may trust the flattering truth of sleep,
My dreams presage some joyful news at hand. Shakespeare.
Dreams advise some great good presaging. Milton.

That cloud, that hangs upon thy brow, presages
A greater storm than all the Turkish power
Can throw upon us. Denham's Sophy.

When others fell, this standing did presage
The crown shou'd triumph over pop'lar rage. Waller.

PRESAGEMENT. n. s. [from presage.]

1. Forebodemment; presension.

I have sent nuch enquiry, whether he had any ominous presagement before his end. Watson.

2. Foretoken.

The falling of salt is an authentick presagement
of ill luck, from whence notwithstanding nothing can be naturally feared. Brown.

PRESBYTER. n. s. [ presbyter, Latin; πρεσβύτερος. ]

1. A priest.

Presbyters absent through infirmity from their churches, might be said to preach by those deputies who in their stead did but read homilies. Hooker.

They cannot delegate the episcopal power, properly so called, to presbyters, without giving them episcopal consecration. L. Strey.

2. A presbyterian

And presbyters have their jackpudding too. Burle.

PRESBYTERIAL. adj. [ presbytericus. ]

PRESBYTERIAN. Consisting of elders;

a term for a modern form of ecclesiastical government.

Chiefly was urged the abolition of episcopal, and establishing of presbyterian government.

Who should exclude him from an interest, and unhappily a more unavoidable sway in presby- terial determinations? Holyday.

PRESBYTERIAN. n. s. [from presbyter.]
An abettor of presbytery or calvinistical discipline.

One of the more rigid presbyterians. Swift.

PRESBYTERT. n. s. [from presbyter.]

Body of elders, whether priests or laymen.

Those which stood for the presbytery, thought their cause had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchy of England. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chans of presbytry, where laymen guide
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.

Could a feeble presbytery, though perchance swelling enough, correct a wealthy, a potent offender? Holyday.

PRESCIENCE. n. s. [ prescience, Fr. from prescient. ] Foreknowledge; knowledge of future things.

They tax our policy, and call it coward,
Foretell our prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Prescience or foreknowledge, considered in order and nature, is we may speak of God after the manner of men, goeth before providence; for God fore-knew all things before he had created them, or before they had being to be cared for; and prescience is no other than an infallible foreknowledge. Raleigh.

God's prescience, from all eternity, being but the seeing every thing that ever exists as it is, contingents as contingents, necessary as necessary, can neither work any change in the object, by thus seeing it, nor itself be deceived in what it sees. Hammond.

If certain prescience of uncertain events imply a contradiction, it seems it may be struck out of the omniscience of God, and leave no blemish behind. More.

Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, God's prescience is certain. South.

Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And prescience only held the second place. Dryden.

PRESCIENT. adj. [ prescians, Latin. ] Foreknowing; prophetic.

Henry, upon the deliberation concerning the marriage of his eldest daughter into Scotland, had shewed himself prescient and almost prescient of this event. Bacon.

Who taught the nations of the field and wood,
Prescient, the tides or tempests to withstand? Pope.

PRESIOUS. adj. [ preciosus, Lat. ] Having foreknowledge.

Thrice happy thou, dear partner of my bed,
Whose holy soul the stroke of fortune fled;
Precious of ills, and leaving me behind,
To drink the dregs of life. Dryden's Aeneis.

To PRESCIND. v. a. [ prescindendo, Lat. ]
To cut off; to abstract.

A bare act of obliquity does not only prescind
from, but positively deny such a special dependence. Norris.

PRESINDENT. adj. [ prescindens, Lat. ] Abstracting.

We may, for one single act, abstract from a reward, which nobody who knows the prescindens faculties of the soul, can deny. Clayne.

To PRESCRIBE. v. a. [ prescribo, Lat. ]

1. To set down authoritatively; to order; to direct.

Doth the strength of some negative arguments prove this kind of negative argument strong, by force whereof all things are denied, which scripture affirmeth not, or all things, which scripture prescribeth not, condemned? Hayter.

To the blank moon her office they prescribe. Milton.

There's joy, when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe. Dryden.

When parents loves are order'd by a son,
Let streams prescribe their fountains where to run. Dryden.

By a short account of the pressing obligations which lie on the magistrate, I shall not so much prescribe directions for the future, as praise what is past. Asterbury.

2. To direct medically.

The end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction; and he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies. Dryden.

The extreme ways they first ordain,
Prescribing such intolerable pain,
As none but Cæsar could sustain. Dryden.

Should any man argue, that a physician understands his own art best; and therefore, although he should prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.

To PRESCRIBE. v. n.

1. To influence by long custom.

A reserve of puerility we have not shaken off from school, where being seasoned with minor sentences, they prescribe upon our riper years, and never are worn out but with our memories. Brown.

2. To influence arbitrarily; to give law.

The assuming an authority of dictating to others, and a forwardness to prescribe to their opinions, is a constant concomitant of this bias of our judgments. Locke.

3. [ Prescrire, French. ] To form a custom which has the force of law.

That obligation upon the lands did not pre- scribe or come into disuse, but by fifty consecutive years of exemption. Alabius.

4. To write medical directions and forms of medicine.

Modern 'pothecaries, taught the art
By doctor's bills to play the doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their matters fools. Pope.

PRESCRIPT. adj. [ prescriptus, Latin. ]

Directed; accurately laid down in a precept.

Those very laws so added, they themselves do not judge unlawful; as they plainly confess both in matter of prescript attire, and of rites appertaining to burial. Hooker.

PRESRIPT. n. s. [ prescriptum, Latin. ]

1. Direction; precept; model prescribed.

prescriptio, Latin; from prescribe, Lat. ]

1. Rules produced and authorized by long custom; custom continued till it has the force of law.

You tell a pedigree
Of threefold and two years, a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth. Shakespeare.

Use such as have prevailed before in things you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription. Bacon's Essays.

It will be found a work of no small difficulty, to dispossess a vice from that heart, where long possession begins to plead prescription. South.

Our poet bade us hope this grace to find,
To whom by long prescription you are kind. Dryden.

The Lucanese plead prescription, for hunting in one of the duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.

2. Medical receipt.

My father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and prov'd effects; such as his reading
And

And manifest experience had collected
For general sovereignty. Shakespeare.

Approving of my obstinacy against all common prescriptions, he asked me, whether I had never heard of the Indian way of curing the gout by moxa. Temple.

PRÆSENCE. n. f. [præsen, French.]

Priority of place in sitting. Not used.

The ghosts, though rude in their other fashions, may, for their discreet judgment in precedence and præsen, read a lesson to our civilit gentry Cassio's Survey of Cornwall.

PRÆSENCE. n. f. [præsen, French; præ- sentia, Latin.]

1. State of being present; contrary to absence.

To-night we hold a solemn supper,
And I'll requit your præsen. Shakespeare.

The præsen of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends,
As it disanimates his enemies. Shakespeare Henry VI.

We have always the same natures, and are every where the servants of the same God, as every place is equally full of his præsen, and every thing is equally his gift. J. v.

2. Approach face to face to a great personage.

The shepherd Dorus answered with such a trembling voice and abashed countenance, and oftentimes so far from the matter, that it was some sport to the young ladies, thinking it want of education, which made him so discountenanced with unwonted præsen. Sidney.

Men that very præsen fear,
Which once they knew authority did bear. Daniel.

3. State of being in the view of a superior.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
In such a præsen here, to plead my thoughts. Sba.
Thou with eternal wisdom didst converse,
Wisdom thy sister, and with her didst play
In præsen of th' Almighty Father, pleas'd
With thy celestial song. Milton.

Perhaps I have not so well consulted the repute of my intellectuals, in bringing their imperfections into such discerning præsen. Glanville's Scipio.

Since clinging cares and trains of inbred fears,
Not aw'd by aims, but in the præsen bold,
Without respect to purple or to gold. Dryden.

4. A number assembled before a great person.

Look I so pale? —
—Ay; and no man in the præsen,
But his red colour hath forsook his cheeks. Shak.
Odmarr, of all this præsen does contain,
Give her your wreath whom you esteem most fair.
Dryden.

5. Port; air; mien; demeanour.

Virtue is best in a body that is comely, and that hath rather dignity of præsen, than beauty of aspect. Bacon.

A graceful præsen bespeaks acceptance, gives a force to language, and helps to convince by look and posture. Culter.

How great his præsen, how erect his look,
How ev'ry grace, how all his virtuous mother
Shines in his face, and charms me from his eyes!
Smith.

6. Room in which a prince shows himself to his court.

By them they pass, all gazing on them round,
And to the præsen mount, whose glorious view
Their frail amazed senses did confound. Spenser.

An't please your grace, the two great cardinals Wait in the præsen. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The lady Anne of Bretagne, passing through the præsen in the court of France, and spying Chartier, a famous poet, leaning upon his elbow fast asleep, openly kissing him, said, we must honour with our kiss the mouth from whence so many sweet verses have proceeded. Peacock.

7. Readiness at need; quickness at expedients.

A good bodily strength is a felicity of nature, but nothing comparable to a large understanding and ready præsen of mind. L'Estrange.

Errors, not to be recall'd, do find
Their best redress from præsen of the mind.
Courage our greatest failings does supply. Waller.

8. The person of a superior.

To her the sovereign præsen thus reply'd. Milt.

PRÆSENCE-CHAMBER. n. f. [præsen
PRÆSENCE-ROOM. n. f. [præsen or room.] The room in which a great person receives company.

It these nerves, which are the conduits to convey them from without to their audience in the brain, the mind's præsen-room, are so disordered, as not to perform their functions, they have no power to be admitted by. Locke.

Knelles, with silence and surprise,
We see Britannia's monarch rise,
And aw'd by thy delicate hand,
As in the præsen chamber stand. Addis.

PRÆSENION. n. f. [præsen, Latin.]

Perception beforehand.

The hedgehog's præsen of winds is exact. Brown.

PRÆSENT. adj. [præsent, French; præ- sentis, Latin.]

1. Not absent; being face to face; being at hand.

But neither of these are any impediment, because the regent thereof is of an infinite immensity more than commensurate to the extent of the world, and such as is most intimately præsent with all the beings of the world. Hale.

Be not often præsent at feasts, not at all in dissolate company; pleasing objects steal away the heart. Taylor.

Much have I heard
Incredible to me, in this displeas'd,
That I was never præsent on the place
Of those encounters. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Not past; not future.

Thou future things canst represent
As præsent. Milton.
A præsent good may reasonably be parted with, upon a probable expectation of a future good which is more excellent. Wilkins.

The moments past, if thou art wise, retrieve
With pleasant memory of the bliss they gave;
The præsent hours in præsent mirth employ,
And bribe the future with the hopes of joy. Prior.

The præsent age hath not been less inquisitive than the former ages were. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The præsent moment like a wife we shun,
And ne'er enjoy, because it is our own. Young.

3. Ready at hand; quick in emergencies.

If a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a præsent wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning. Bacon.

'Tis a high point of philosophy and virtue for a man to be so præsent to himself, as to be always provided against all accidents. L'Estrange.

4. Favourably attentive; not neglectful; propitious.

Be præsent to her now, as then,
And let not proud and tactious men
Against your wills oppose their mights. Ben Jonson.

The golden goddess, præsent at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimate fair,
And gave the sign of granting his desire. Dryden.

Nor could I hope in any place but there,
To find a god so præsent to my pray'r. Dryden.

5. Unforgotten; not neglectful.

The ample mind keeps the several objects all within sight, and præsent to the soul. Watts.

6. Not abstracted; not absent of mind;
attentive.

Being now in view; being now under consideration.

This much I believe may be said, that the much greater part of them are not brought up for well, or accustomed to so much religion, as in the præsent instance. Low.

PRÆSENT. An elliptical expression for the præsent time; the time now existing.

When he saw descend

The Son of God to judge them, garr'd
He fled, not hoping to escape, but shun
The præsent; fearing, guilty, what his wrath Might suddenly inflict. Milton.

Men that set their hearts only upon the præsent, without looking forward into the end of things, are struck at. L'Estrange.

Who, since their own short understandings reach
No further than the præsent, think ev'n the wife
Speak what they think, and tell tales of themselves. Brown.

5. To put into the hands of another in ceremony.

So ladies in romance assist their knight,
Præs the spear, and arm him for the fight. Pope.

6. To favour with gifts. To præs, in the sense of to give, has several structures: we say absolutely, to præs a man, to give something to him. This is less in use. The common phrases are, to præs a gift to a man; or to præs the man with a gift. Thom.

Thou spendest thy time in waiting upon such a great one, and thy estate in presenting him; and, after all, hast no other reward, but sometimes to be smiled upon, and always to be smiled at. South.

PRESIDENTSHIP, n. f. [from president.] The office and place of president.

When things came to trial of practice, their pastus learning, would be at all times of force to overpersuade simplicity, who, knowing the time of their own presidentship to be but short, would always stand in fear of their ministers personal authority. Hale.

PRESIDIAL, adj. [presidium, Lat.] Relating to a garrison.

To PRESS, v. a. [presser, French; pressus, Latin.]

1. To squeeze; to crush.

The grapes I press into Parnass's cup. Genesi.
Good music press down, shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your wisdom. Lucret. vi. 38.

From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempereth dulcet cream. Milton.
I put phlegms of lust press'd out on the exco-tiation. H'sman.

Their morning milk the peasants press at night,
Their evening milk below the living light. Dryden.
After pressing out of the collected for oil in Lincolndale, they burn the cakes to heat their ovens. Mortimer.

2. To distress; to crush with calamities.

Once or twice the heav'd name of father
Pantingly forth, as it if press his heart. Shaksp.

3. To constrain; to compel; to urge by necessity.

The experience of his goodness in her own deliverance, might cause her merciful disposition to take so much the more delight in saving others, whom the like necessity should press. Hooke.
The goss that rode upon moles and camels, went out, being hasten'd and press'd on by the king's commands. Estlin.
I was press'd by his majesty's commands, to assist at the treaty. Temple's Miscellany.

He gares; and straight
With hunger press'd, devours the pleasing bait. Dryden.

4. To impose by constraint.

He press'd a letter upon me, within this hour,
to deliver to you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. To drive by violence.

Come with words as medical as true,
Honest as ether, to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shaksp.

6. To affect strongly.

Paul was press'd in spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ. Acts, xviii. 5.
Wickedness, condemn'd by her own witness, and press'd with conscience, forecasteth grievous things. Wisdom, xvii. 11.

7. To enforce; to inculcate with argument or importunity.

Be sure to press upon him every motive. Addison.
I am the more bold to press it upon you, because these accomplishments sit more handsomely on persons of quality than any other. Felt.

Those who negotiated, took care to make demand, impossible to be complied with, and therefore might securely press every article, as if they were in earnest. Swift.

8. To urge; to bear strongly on.

Chymists I might press with arguments, drawn from some of the eminentest writers of that sect. Hugh.

The cardinal being press'd in dispute on this head, could think of no better answer. Waller.
His easy heart receiv'd the guilty flame,
And from that time he press'd her with his passion. South.

9. To compress; to hug, as in embracing.

He press'd her matron lips
With kisses pure. Milton.

She took her son, and press'd
Th' illudious infant to her fragrant breast. Dryden.
Leucothoe shook,
And press'd Pulemon close in her arms. Pope.

10. To act upon with weight.

The place thou press'st on thy mother earth,
Is all thy empire now; how it contains thee. Dryden.

11. To make carnell. Press or press'd is here perhaps rather an adjective; presse,
French; or from presser or impresser, 11.

Let them be press'd, and ready to give succours to their confederates, as it ever was with the Romans: for if the confederate had leagues defensive,
the Romans would ever be the foemoll. Bacon.
Press for their country's honour and their king's,
On then sharp beaks they whet their pointed stings. Dryden.

12. To force into military service. This is properly impress.

Do but say to me that I should do,
That in your knowledge may by me be done,
And I am press'd to it. Shaksp.

For every man that Polingbrooke hath press'd
To lift sharp steel against our golden crown, Heav'n for his Richard hath in store
A glorious angel. Shaksp.

From London by the king I was press'd forth. Shaksp.
They are enforced of very necessity to press the best and greatest part of their men out of the West country, which is no small charge. Richb.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army by pressing, found opposition in many places. Cicero.

The peaceful peasant to the wars is press'd,
The fields he follow in inglorious rest. Dryden.

You were press'd for the sea-service, and got off with much ado. Swift.

To PRESS, v. n.

1. To act with compulsive violence; to urge; to distress.

It there be any press on the one side, and none at all on the other, and if the most pressing difficulties be on that side on which there are no proofs, this is sufficient to render one opinion very credible, and the other incredible. Tellerius.

A great many uneasinesses always soliciting the will, it is natural, that the greatest and most pressing should determine it to the next action. Locke.

2. To go forward with violence to any object.

I make bold to press
With so little preparation. Shaksp.

I press toward the mark for the prize. Philop.
The Turks gave a great shout, and press'd in on all sides, to have entered the breach. Knellet.

The insulting victor presses on the more,
And tramples the steps the vanquish'd trod before. Dryden.

She is always drawn in a posture of walking, it being as natural for Hope to press forward to her proper objects, as for Fear to fly from them. Addison.

Let us not therefore faint, or be weary in our journey, much less turn back or sit down in despair; but press cheerfully forward to the high mark of our calling. Rogers.

3. To make invasion; to encroach.

On superiour powers

Were we to press, inferior might on ours. Pope.

4. To crowd; to throng.

For he had healed many, insomuch that they press'd upon him for to touch him. Mark, iii. 10.

Thronging crowds press on you as you pass,
And with their eager joy make triumph flow. Dryden.

5. To come unseasonably or importunately.

Counsel the me, and I will give thy ear
The knowledge, first of what is fit to hear:
What I want with others on alone,
Beware to learn, nor press too near the throne. Dryden.

6. To urge with vehemence and importunity.

He press'd upon them greatly; and they turned
in. Genesi.

The less blood he drew, the more he took of treasure; and, as some construed it, he was the more sparing in the one, that he might be the more pressing in the other. Bacon.

So thick the shivering army stands,
And press for passage with extended hands. Dryden.

7. To act upon or influence.

When arguments press equally in matters indifferent, the safest method is to give up ourselves to neither. Addison.

8. To PRESS upon. To invade; to push against.

Patrocus presses upon Hector too boldly, and by obliging him to fight, discovers it was not the true Achilles. Pope.

PRESS, n. f. [pressoir, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The instrument by which any thing is crushed or squeezed; a wine press, a cider press.

The press is full, the fats overflow. Jed, iii. 13.
When one came to the press fats to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. Haggai, ii. 16.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the last vessels the fluniers, to separate the pure emulsion from the feces. Arbutnot.

They kept their cloaths, when they were not worn, constantly in a press, to give them a lustre. Arbutnot.

2. The instrument by which books are printed.

These letters are of the second edition; he will print them out of doubt, for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put us two in. Shaksp.

His obligation to read not only classic authors, but the more recent abortions of the press, wherein he proved frequently concerned. Felt.

While Milt and Wilkins rise in weekly might,
Make press a groan, lead senators to fight. Young.

3. Crowd; tumult; throng.

Paul and Barnabas, when infidels admiring their virtues, went about to sacrifice unto them, rent their garments in token of horror, and as frighted, ran crying through the press of the people, O men, wherefore do ye these things? Mothers.

She held a great gold chain ylinked well,
Whose upper end to highest heaven was knitz,
And lower part did reach to lowest hell,
And all that press did round about her swell,
To catchen hold of that long chain. Spenser.

Who is it in the press that calls on me?
I hear a language, shriller than all the music, Cry, Caesar. Shaksp.

Shaksp. Julius Caesar, Ambitious

Ambitious Turnus in the prels appears,
And aggravating crimes augment their fears. Dryd.
A new express all Agra does affright;
Darah and Aurangzeb are join'd in fight;
The prels of people thickens to the court;
Th' impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryden.
Through the prels enrag'd Thalestris flies,
And scatters darts around from both her eyes. Pope.

4. Violent tendency.

Death having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves it in insensible, his siege is now
Against the mind; the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies;
Which in thick throng, and prels to that last hold,
Confound themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. A kind of wooden case or frame for clothes and other uses.

Creep into the kill hole.—Neither prels, coffer, cheit, trunk, but he hath an abstrait for the remembrance of such plices. Shakespeare.

6. A commission to force men into military service. For impress.

If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a fowle'd gurnet; I have misus'd the king's prels damnably.

Shakespeare.

Concerning the musters and prels for sufficient mariners to serve in his majesty's ships, either the care is very little, or the bribery very great. Raleigh.

Why has there been now and then a kind of a prels issued out for ministers, so that as it were the vagabonds and loiterers were taken in? Duvenant.

PRESSBED. n. s. [from press and bed.] Bed so formed, as to be shut up in a case.

PRESSER. n. s. [from press.] One that presses or works at a press.

Of the stuffs I give the profits to dyers and pressers. Swift.

PRESSGANG. n. s. [press and gang.] A crew that strolls about the streets to force men into naval service.

PRESSINGLY. adv. [from pressing.] With force; closely.

The one contracts his words, speaking pressingly and short, the other delights in long-breathed accents. Howell.

PRESSION. n. s. [from press.] The act of pressing.

If light consisted only in pression, propagated without actual motion, it would not be able to agitate and heat the bodies which refract and reflect it:
if it consisted in motion, propagated to all distances in an instant, it would require an infinite force every moment, in every shining particle, to generate that motion: and if it consisted in pression or motion, propagated either in an instant or in time, it would bend into the shadow. Newton's Opticks.

PRESSIVANT. adj. Gravitating; heavy.

A word not in use.
Neither the celestial matter of the vortices, nor the air, nor water, are pressivants in their proper places. Moss.

PRESSMAN. n. s. [press and man.]

1. One who forces another into service;

one who forces away.

One only path to all, by which the pressmen came.

Chapman.

2. One who makes the impression of print by the press; distinct from the compositor, who ranges the types.

PRESSMONEY. n. s. [press and money.]

Money given to a soldier when he is taken or forced into the service.

Here Peacock, take my pouch. 'Tis all I own,
'Tis my pressmoney.—Can this silver fail? Gay.

PRESSURE. n. s. [from press.]

1. The act of pressing or crushing.

2. The state of being pressed or crushed.

Force acting against any thing; gravitation; pression.

The inequality of the pressure of parts appeareth in this; that if you take a body of stone, and another of wood of the same magnitude and shape, and throw them with equal force, you cannot throw the wood so far as the stone. Bacon.

Although the glasses were a little convex, yet this transparent spot was of a considerable breadth, which breadth seemed principally to proceed from the yielding inwards of the parts of the glasses, by reason of their mutual pressure. Newton.

The blood flows through the vessels by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive. Arbutnot.

4. Violence inflicted; oppression.

A wise father ingenuously confessed, that those, which persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein. Bacon.

His modesty might be secured from pressure by the concealing of him to be the author. Fell.

5. Affliction; grievance; distress.

Mine own and my people's pressures are grievous, and peace would be very pleasing. King Charles.

The genuine price of lands in England would be twenty years purchase, were it not for accidental pressure under which it labours. Child on Trade.

To this consideration he retreats, in the midst of all his pressures, with comfort; in this thought, notwithstanding the sad afflictions with which he was overwhelmed, he mightily exults. Atterbury.

Excellent was the advice of Elephas to Job, in the midst of his great troubles and pressures: acquaint thyself now with God, and be at peace.

Atterbury.

6. Impression; stamp; character made by impression.

From my memory

I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All faws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copy'd there. Shakespeare.

PREST. adj. [prest or prêt, French.]

1. Ready; not dilatory. This is said to have been the original sense of the word prest men; men, not forced into the service, as now we understand it, but men, for a certain sum received, prest or ready to march at command.

Each mind is prest, and open ev'ry ear,
To hear new tidings, though they no way joy us.

Fairfax.

Critius desired nothing more than to have confirmed the opinion of his authority in the mind of the vulgar, by the prest and ready attendant of the Vayvod. Volles's History of the Turks.

2. Neat; tight. In both senses, the word is obsolete.

More wealth any where, to be breefe,
More people, more handsome and prest
Where find ye? Tulser's Husbandry.

PREST. n. s. [prest, French.] A loan.

He required of the city a prest of six thousand marks; but he could obtain but two thousand pounds. Bacon.

PRESTIGATION. n. s. A deceiving; a juggling; a playing legerdemain. Dis.

PRESTIGES. n. s. [prestigia, Latin.] Illusions; impostures; juggling tricks. Dis.

PRESTO. n. s. [presto, Italian; presto, Lat.] Quick; at once. A word used by those that show legerdemain.

Presto! begone! 'tis here again;
There's every piece as big as ten. Swift.

PRESUMABLY. adv. [from presume.] Without examination.

Authors presumably writing by common places, wherein, for many years, promiscuously amassing all that make for their subject, break forth at last into useless rhapsodies. Brown.

To PRESUME. v. n. [presumer, Fr. presumo, Latin.]

1. To suppose; to believe previously with- out examination.

O much deceiv'd, much falling, beguile Eve!
Of thy presum'd return! event perverted! Milton.

Experience supplants the use of conjectures in the point; we do not only presume it may be so, but actually find it is so. Government of the Tongue.

2. To suppose; to affirm without im- mediate proof.

Although in the relation of Moses there be very few persons mentioned, yet are there many more to be presumed. Brown.

I presume,
That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love; my pow'r rain'd honour more

On you, than any. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To venture without positive leave.

There was a matter we were no less desirous to know, than fearful to ask, lest we might presume too far. Bacon.

I to the heav'nly vision thus presum'd. Milton.

4. To form confident or arrogant opi- nions: with upon before the cause of confidence.

The life of Ovid being already written in our language, I will not presume so far upon myself, to think I can add any thing to Mr. Sandys his undertaking. Dryden.

This man presumes upon his parts, that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand.

Locke.

5. To make confident or arrogant at- tempts.

In this we fail to perform the thing which God seeth meet, convenient, and good; in that we presume to see what is meet and convenient, better than God himself. Hooker.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far, that earthly sight,
If it presume, might err in things too high,
And no advantage gain. Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. It has on or upon sometimes before the thing supposed.

He, that would not deceive himself, ought to build his hypothesis on matter of fact, and not presume on matter of fact, because of his hypothesis. Locke.

Luther presumes upon the gift of continency.

Atterbury.

7. It has of sometimes, but not properly.

Presuming of his force, with sparkling eyes,

Already he devours the promis'd prize. Dryden.

PRESUMER. n. s. [from presume.] One that presupposes; an arrogant person.

Heavy with some high minds is an overweight of obligation; otherwise great defenders do grow intolerable presumers. Wotton.

PRESUMPTION. n. s. [presumptus, Lat. presomption, French.]

1. Supposition previously formed.

Thou hast shew'd us how unsafe it is to offend thee, upon presumptions afterwards to please thee.

King Charles.

Though men in general believed a future state, yet they had but confused presumptions of the nature and condition of it. Rogers.

2. Confidence grounded on any thing presupposed: with upon.

A presumption upon this aid, was the principal motive for the undertaking. Clarendon.

Those at home held their immoderate engrossments of power by no other tenure, than their own presumption upon the necessity of affairs. Swift.

3. An argument strong, but not demon- strative; a strong probability.

The error and insufficiency of their arguments doth make it, on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption, that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things, as he hath not enabled them to prove. Hooker.

4. Arro-

4. Arrogance; confidence blind and adventurous; presumptuousness.

Let thy presumption not provide thy wealth;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art. Shakespeare.

It warns a warrior carriage in the things.
Left blind presumption work their ruling. Daniel.
I had the presumption to dedicate to you a very unfinished piece. Dryden.

5. Unreasonable confidence of divine favour.

The use of his majesty will keep us from presumption, and the promises of his mercy from despair. Rogers.

PRESUMPTIVE. adj. [presumptivus, Fr. from presume.]

1. Taken by previous supposition.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is a lion, and that a rose. Locke.

2. Supposed: as, the presumptive heir; opposed to the heir apparent.

3. Confident; arrogant; presumptuous.

There being two opinions repugnant to each other, it may not be presumptive or sceptical to doubt of both. Brown.

PRESUMPTUOUS. adj. [presumptivus, presumptueux, French.]

1. Arrogant; confident; insolent.

Presumptuous priest, this place commands my attence. Shakespeare.
I follow him not
With any token of presumptuous suit;
Nor would I have him, till I do deserve him. Shak.

The boldness of advocates prevails with judges, whereas they should imitate God, who repelleth
the presumptuous, and giveth grace to the modest.
Bacon's Essays.

Their minds somewhat rais'd
By false presumptuous hope. Milton.
It being not the part of a presumptuous, but of a truly humble man to do what he is bidden, and to please those whom he is bound in duty to obey.
Kentwell.

Some will not venture to look beyond received notions of the age, nor have in presumptuous a thought, as to be wiser than their neighbours. Locke.

2. Irreverent with respect to holy things.

The sins wherewith he falleth, are not presumptuous;
but are ordinarily of weakness and infirmity.
Perkins.

Thus I presumptuous: and the vision bright,
As with a smile more brighten'd, thus reply'd. Milt.
The power's intent'd

Punish'd his presumptuous pride,
That for his daring enterprise the sky'd. Dryden.
Canst thou love

Presumptuous Crete, that boasts the tomb of Jove?
Pope.

PRESUMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from presumptuous.]

1. Arrogantly; confidently.

2. Irreverently.

Do you, who study nature's works, decide,
Whilst I the dark mysterious cause admire;
Nor, into what the gods conceal, presumptuously enquire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. With vain and groundless confidence in divine favour.

I entreat your prayers, that God will keep me from all premature persuasion of my being in Christ, and not suffer me to go on presumptuously or desperately in any course. Hammond.

PRESUMPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from presumptuous.] Quality of being presumptuous; confidence; irreverence.

PRESUPPOSE. v. a. [presupposui, Fr. presupposer, presupposer, French.]

Supposed previously formed.

All things necessary to be known that we may be saved, but known with presupposui of knowledge concerning certain principles, whereof it receiveth us already persuaded. Hooker.

To PRESUPPOSE. v. a. [presupposui, Fr. presupposer, presupposer, French.]

To suppose as previous; to imply as antecedent.
In as much as righteous life presupposui life,
in as much as to live virtuously it is impossible except we live; the first impediment, which we endeavour to remove, is penury and want of things without which we cannot live. Hooker.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds, each of them presupposui many necessary things learned in other sciences, and known beforehand.
Hooker.

PRESUPPOSITION. n. s. [presupposition, French; presupposition, French.]

Supposition previously formed.

PRESUMISE. n. s. [presumise, French.]

Surmise previously formed.

It was your presumise,
That, in the dote of blows, your ion might drop.
Shakespeare.

PRETENCE. n. s. [pretensio, Latin.]

1. A false argument grounded upon fictitious postulates.

This pretence against religion will not only be baffled, but we shall gain a new argument to persuade men over. Tillotson.

2. The act of showing or alleging what is not real; shew; appearance.

With flying speed and seeming great pretence
Came running in a messenger. Spenser.
So strong his appetite was to those executions he had been accustomed to in Ireland, without any kind of commission or pretence of authority.
Clarendon.

Let not Tawjans, with a false pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryd.
I should have dressed the whole with greater care; but I had little time, which I am sure you know to be more than pretence. Wake.

3. Assumption; claim to notice.

Desist not these few ensuing pages; for never was any thing of this pretence more ingeniously impud. Evelyn.

4. Claim true or false.

Spirits on our just pretences arm'd Fell with us. Milton.
O worthy not of liberty alone,
Too mean pretence, but honour. Milton.

Primogeniture cannot have any pretence to a right of solely inheriting property or power. Locke.

5. Shakespeare uses this word with more affinity to the original Latin, for something threatened, or held out to terrify.

I have conceived a most faint neglect of late,
which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence and purpose of unkindness. Shakespeare.

In the great hand of God I stand, and thence Against the undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hath writ this to feel my affection for your honour, and to no other pretence of danger. Shak.

To PRETEND. v. a. [pretendo, Latin; pretendre, French.]

1. To hold out; to stretch forward. This is mere latinity, and not used; perhaps it should be pretends.
Lucasius, to lash his horses, bends Prone to the wheels, and his left foot pretends. Dry.

2. To simulate; to make false appearances or representations; to allege falsely.
This let him know,
Left wilfully transgressing he pretends. Milton.

religion, when it is so apparently for the benefit?

not only of human society, but of every particular person. Tillotson.

3. To show hypocritically.

'Tis their interest to guard themselves from those riotous effects of pretended zeal, not to less their duty. Darby of Pity.

4. To hold out as a deceptive appearance; to exhibit as a cover of something hidden. This is rather Latin.

Warn all creatures from their Henceforth; lest that too heavily form, pretended
To health falsehood, spare them. Milton.

5. To claim. In this sense we rather say, pretend to.

Chiefs shall be grudg'd the part which they pre- tend. Dryden.
Are they not rich? what more can they pre- tend? Pope.

To PRETEND. v. n.

1. To put in a claim truly or falsely. It is seldom used without shade of cen- sure.

What peace can be, where both to one pretend?

I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God,
of that which cost me nothing. 2 Samuel, xxiv. 24.
From that which hath its price in composition, if you take away any thing, or any part do fail, all is disgrace. Bacon.

If fortune has a niggard been to thee,
Devote thyself to thrift, not luxury;
And wisely make that kind of food thy choice,
To which necessity confines thy price. Dryden.

2. Value; estimation; supposed excellence.

We stand in some jewel's use, left by thus overvalu-ing their lessons, they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hosker.
Sugar hath put down the use of honey, inasmuch as we have lost those preparations of honey which the ancients had, when it was more in use. Bacon.

At which any thing is sold.

Supposing the quantity of wheat, in respect to the price, be the same, that makes the change in the value of wheat. Locke.

4. Reward; thing purchased by merit.

Sometimes virtue serves, while vicious feed;
What then? is the reward of virtue bread?
That, vice may merit; 'tis the price of toil;
The knave deserves it, when he tills the soil. Pope.

To PRICE. v. a. To pay for.

Some shall pay the price of others' guilt;
And he the man that made Sans-loy to fall,
Shall with his own blood price that he hath spilt.
Spenser.

To PRICK. v. a. [priccan, Saxon.]

and well polished sides, which meet in three parallel lines, running from the three angles of one end, to the three angles of the other end. Newton.

Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds
Foam, fronting on the sun, thy showery prism.
Thomson.

PRISMA'TICK. adj. [prismatique, French;
from prism] Formed as a prism.

If the mass of the earth was cubick, prisma-tick, or any other angular figure, it would follow, that one, too vast a part, would be drowned, and another be dry. Derham.

Falsh eloquence, like the prismatick glass,
Its gaudy colours spreads on ev'ry place;
The face of nature we no more survey,
All glare alike, without distinction gay. Pope.

PRISMA'TICALLY. adv. [from prisma-tick] In the form of a prism.

Take notice of the pleasing variety of colours exhibited by the triangular glass, and demand what addition or decrement of either salt, sulphur, or mercury, befills the glass, by being prismatically figured; and yet it is known, that without that shape, it would not afford those colours as it does. Boyle.

PRISMO'ID. n. f. A body approaching to the form of a prism.

PRISON. n. f. [prison, French.] A

To whose fust bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner. Shakespeare's Richard II.
The most pernicious infection, next the plague, is the smell of the jail, when prisoners have been long and close, and natively kept. Bacon.

He that is tied with one slender string, such as one resolute struggle would break, he is prisoner only at his own sloth, and who will pity his thraldom? Decay of Piety.

A prisoner is troubled, that he cannot go whither he would; and he that is at large is troubled, that he does not know whither to go. L'Estrange.

2. A captive; one taken by the enemy.

So oft as homeward I from her depart,
I go like one that having lost the field,
Is prisoner led away with heavy heart. Spenser.

The Britons recollect. Philips.

This light being trajected only through the parallel superficies of the two prisms, if it suffered any change by the refraction of one superficies, it lost that impression by the contrary refraction of the other superficies, and so, being restored to its pristine constitution, became of the same nature and condition as at first. Newton.

PRITHEE. A familiar corruption of pray thee, or I pray thee, which some of the tragick writers have injudiciously used.

Well, what was that scream for, I pritheer?
L'Estrange.

Alas! why com'st thou at this dreadful moment,
To shock the peace of my departing soul?
Away! I pritheer leave me! Rowe's Jane Shore.

PRIVACY. n. f. [from private.]

1. State of being secret; secrecy.

Delights, for change, thro' private paths to stray. Harte.

2. Alone; not accompanied.

3. Being upon the same terms with the rest of the community; particular: opposed to publick.

When publick consent of the whole hath esta-blish'd any thing, every man's judgment, being thereunto compar'd, were private, howsoever his calling be to some kind of publick charge; so that of peace and quietness there is not any way possible, unless the probable voice of every intire society or body politick overrule all private of like nature in the same body. Hooker's Preface.

He furs
To let him breathe between the heav'ns and earth,
A private man in Athens. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

What infinite heartache must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy? and what have kings,
That private have not too, save ceremony? Shak.
Peter was but a private man, and not to be any way compared with the dukes of his house.

Peacemakers of Antiquities.
The first principles of christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets.
Sanderfon.

PRIVATION. n. f. [privation, French;
privatio, Latin.]

1. Removal or destruction of any thing or quality.

PRI

For, what is this contagious sin of kind,
But a privation of that grace within? Davies.
If the privation be good, it follows not the former condition was evil, but less good, for the flower or blossom is a positive good, although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative good. Bacon.

So bounded are our natural desires,
That wanting all, and setting pain aside,
With bare privation life is satisfy'd. Dryden.
After some account of good, evil will be known by consequence, as being only a privation or absence of good. South.

A privation is the absence of what does naturally belong to the thing, or which ought to be present with it; as when a man or horse is deaf or dead, or a physician or divine unlearned, these are privations.
Watts's Logic.

2. The act of the mind by which, in considering a subject, we separate it from any thing appendant.

3. The act of degrading from rank or office.

2. Consisting in the absence of something; not positive. Privative is in things, what negative is in propositions.

The impression from privative to active, as from silence to noise, is a greater degree than from less noise to more. Bacon.

The very privative blessings, the blessings of immunity, safeguard, liberty and integrity, which we enjoy, derive the thanksgiving of a whole life.
Taylor.

PRIVATIVE. n. f. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.

Harmonical sounds and discordant sounds are both active and positive, but blackness and darkness are indeed but privatives, and therefore have little or no activity; somewhat they do contribute, but very little. Bacon's Natural History.

PRIVATIVELY. adv. [from privative.]

1. By the absence of something necessary to be present.

2. Negatively.

The duty of the new covenant is set down, first privatively, not like that of Mosaic observance; external, but positively, laws given into the mind and hearts. Hammond.

PRIVATIVENESS. n. f. [from privative.] Notation of absence of something that should be present.

PRIVET. n. f. A plant. Miller.

PRIVET. n. j. [ligustrum] Evergreen.

PRIVILEGE. n. f. [privilegium, Fr. privilegium, Latin.]

1. Peculiar advantage.

Here's my word,
Behold it is the privilege of mine honours,
My oath, and my profession. Shakespeare.

He went

Invisible, yet stay'd, with privilege

With omnipotence. Milton.

He claims his privilege—and says 'tis fit,

Nothing should be the price of wit, but wit. Dodd.

Smiles, not allow'd to leave, from reason move,
And are the privilege of hum in love. Dryden.

When the chief captain order'd him to let loose uncondemned, he pleads the legal privilege of a

Roman, who ought not to be treated so. Kilbow.

A soul that can securely death defy,
And counts it nature's privilege to die. Dryden.

PRI

The privilege of birth-right was a double-portion. Locke.

2. Immunity; right not universal.

I beg the ancient privilege of Athens. Shakspeare.

TO PRIVILEGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To invest with rights or immunities; to grant a privilege.

The great are privileg'd alone,

To punish all injustice but their own. Dryden.

He happier yet, who privileg'd by fate

To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,

Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,

Ordain'd to morrow to return to death. Prior.

2. To exempt from censure or danger.

The court is rather deem'd as a privileg'd place of unbridled licentiousness, than as the abiding of him, who, as a father, should give a fatherly example. Sidney.

He took this place for functuary,

And it shall privilege him from your hands. Shak.

This place

Doth privilege me, speak what reason will. Daniel.

3. To exempt from paying tax or impost.

Many things are by our laws privileg'd from tythes, which by the canon law are chargeable. Hal.

PRIVILEY. adv. [from privy.] Secretly;

privately

They have the profits of their lands by the licence of conveyances thereof unto their privy friends, who privy lend them the revenue. Apoc. State of Ind.

PRIVITY. n. f. [privatus, French; from privy.]

1. Private communication.

I will unto you in privacy discover the drift of my purpose; I mean thereby to settle an eternal peace in that country, and also to make it very profitable to her majesty. Spenser.

2. Confidentialness; joint knowledge; private concurrence.

The authority of higher powers hath force even in the things which are done without their privacy, and are of mean reckoning. Hooker.

Upon this French going out, took he upon him,

Without the privacy of the king, to appoint

Who should attend him. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

All the doors were laid open for his departure, not without the privacy of the prince of Orange, concluding that the kingdom might better be settled in his absence. Swift.

3. [In the plural.] Secret parts.

Let of their privies nothing to cover their privies. Deben.

PRIVY. adj. [privus, French.]

1. Private; not publick; assigned to secret uses.

The party, against the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods; the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state. Shakspeare.

2. Secret; clandestine; done by stealth

He took advantage of the night for such privy attempts, inasmuch that the bruit of his machinings was spread every where. 2 Mac. viii. 7.

3. Secret; not shewn; not publick.

The sword of the great men that are slain en-tereth into their privy chamber. Lament. xxi. 14.

4. Admitted to secrets of state.

The king has made him

One of the privy council. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

One, having let his beard grow from the martyrdom of king Charles I. till the restoration, defied to be made a privy counsellor. Spenser.

5. Conscious to any thing; admitted to participation of knowledge.

St Valentine

This night intends to steal away your daughter;

Myself am one made privy to the plot. Shakspeare.

Many bring privy to the fact,

How hard it is to keep it unbetray'd? Daniel.

He would rather lose half of his kingdom, than be privy to such a secret, which he commanded me never to mention. Swift.

PRO

PRIVY. n. f. Place of retirement; necessary house.

Your fancy

Would still the same ideas give ye,

As when you spy'd her on the privy. Swift.

PRIZE. n. f. [prix, French.]

1. A reward gained by contest with competitors.

If ever he go alone, I'll never wrestle for prizes.

brake the ring. Shakspeare.

Though their foe were big and strong, and often

Forg'd of their lances; yet enforc't, he left th' affected prizes. Clayman.

I fought and conquer'd, yet have lost the prizes.

Dryden.

The raising such silly competitions among the ignorant, proposing prizes for such useless accomplishments, and inspiring them with such absurd ideas of superiority, has in it something immoral as well as ridiculous. Addison.

They are not indeed suffered to dispute with us

the proud prizes of arts and sciences, of learning and elegance, in which I have much suspicion they would often prove our superiors. Lane.

2. A reward gained by any performance.

True poets empty fame and praise despite;

Fame is the trumpet, but you smile the prizes.

Dryden.

3. [Prize, French.] Something taken by adventure; plunder.

The king of Scots he did send to France,

To fill king Edward's fame with prisoner kings,

And make his chronicle as rich with prizes,
As is the oozy bottom of the sea

With sunken wreck. Shakspeare's Henry V.

Age that all men overcome, has made his prizes on thee. Clayman.

He acquitted himself like a valiant, but not like an honest man, for he convicted the prizes to his own use. Atterbury.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent eyes

Soon to obtain and long possess the prizes. Pope.

TO PRIZE. v. a. [from appraiser; priser, French; appraiser, Latin.]

1. To rate; to value at a certain price.

Life I prize not a shaw; but for name honour,

Which I would free. Shakspeare.

A goodly price that I was prized at of them.

Zab. xi. 15.

2. To esteem; to value highly.

I go to free us both of pain,

I prize d your person, but your crown did damn. Dry.

Some the French writers, some our own despise;

The ancients only, or the moderns, prize. Pope.

PRIZER. n. f. [priser, French; from prize.] He that values.

It holds its estimate and dignity,

As well wherein it prizes us of itself,

As in the prizer. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.

PRIZEFIGHTING. n. f. [prize and fighter.]

One that fights publicly for a reward.

Martin and Crambe engag'd like prize-fighters.

Johnson and Pope.

In fig the prize-fights by day delight. Bramston.

PRO. [Latin.] For; in defence of; pro and con, for pro and contra, for and against. Despicable cant.

Doctrinal points in controversy had been agitated in the pulpits, with more warmth than had used to be, and thence the animosity increased in books

pro and con. Clarendon.

Matthew met Richard, when

Of many knotty points they spoke,

And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

PROBABILITY. n. f. [probabilitas, Lat.

probabilitas, French; from probable.]

Likelihood; appearance of truth; evidence arising from the preponderation of argument: it is less than moral certainty.

Probability is the appearance of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, by the intervention of proofs, whose connection is not constant; but appears for the most part to be so. Locke.

As for probabilities, what thing was there ever set down to agreeable with sound reason, but some probable shew against it might be made? Hobbes.

The reason why men are moved to believe a probability of gain by adventuring their stocks into such foreign countries as they have never seen, and of which they have made no trial, is from the testimony of other credible persons. Wilkins.

If a truth be certain, and thwart interest, it will quickly fetch it down to but a probability; nay, if it does not carry with it an impregnable evidence, it will go near to debase it to a downright falsity. South.

Though moral certainty be sometimes taken for a high degree of probability, which can only produce a doubtful assent; yet it is also frequently used for a firm assent to a thing upon such grounds as fully satisfy a prudent man. Tillotson.

For a perpetual motion, magnetical virtues are not without some strong probabilities of proving effectual. Wilkins.

Which tempers, if they were duly improved by proper studies, and sober methods of education, would in all probability carry them to greater heights of piety, than are to be found amongst the generality of men. Law.

PROBABLE. adj. [probable, French; probabilis, Lat.] Likely; having more evidence than the contrary.

The publick approbation, given by the body of the whole church unto those things which are established, doth make it but probable that they are good, and therefore unto a necessary proof that they are not good it must give place. Hosier.

The only reasonable enquiry is, which is of probables the most, or of improbables the least such. Hammond.

I do not say, that the principles of religion are merely probable, I have before asserted them to be morally certain; and that to a man who is careful to preserve his mind free from prejudice, and to consider, they will appear unquestionable, and the deductions from them demonstrable. Wilkins.

That is accounted probable, which has better arguments producible for it, than can be brought against it. South.

They assented to things that were neither evident nor certain, but only probable; for they conceived, they merchandized upon a probable persuasion of the honesty and truth of those whom they corresponded with. South.

PROBABLY. adv. [from probable.] Likely; in likelihood.

Distinguish betwixt what may possibly, and what will probably be done. L'Estrange's Fables.

Our constitution in church or state could not probably have been long preserved, without such method. Swift.

PROBAT. n. f. [Latin.] The proof of wills and testaments of persons deceased in the spiritual court, either in common form by the oath of the executor or with witnesses. Diſ.

PROBATION. n. f. [probatio, Latin; from probo, Latin; probation, French.]

1. Proof; evidence; testimony.

Of the truth herein,

This present object made probation. Shak. Hamlet.
He was lapt in a most curious mantle, which, for more probati n, I can produce. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The kinds of probation for several things being as much disproportioned, as the objects of the several senses are to one another. Wilkins.

2. The act of proving by ratiocination or testimony.

When their principles, what is, is, and it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be, are made use of in the probation of propositions, wherein are words standing for complex ideas, as man or horse, there they make men receive and retain falsehood for manifest truth. Locke.

3. [Probation, French.] Trial; examination.

In the practical part of knowledge, much will be left to experience and probation, whereunto indication cannot so fully reach. Bacon's Nat. History.

4. Moral trial.

At the end of the world, when the state of our trial and probation shall be finished, it will be a proper season for the distribution of public justice. Nelson.

5. Trial before entrance into monastick life; noviciate.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof, in your days of probation, you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.

PROBATIONARY. adj. [from probation.] Serving for trial.

PROBATIONER. n. f. [from probation.]

1. One who is upon trial.

Hear a mortal muse thy praise rehearse

In no ignoble verse;

But such as thy own verse did practise here,

When thy first truits of poetry were giv'n,

To make thyself a welcome inmate there;

While yet a young probationer,

And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

Build a thousand churches, where these probationers may read their wall lectures. Swift.

2. A novice.

This root of bitterness was but a probationer in the soil, and though it let forth some effects to preserve its kind, yet Satan was vain to cherish them. Deary of Piety.

PROBATIONERSHIP. n. f. [from probationer.] State of being a probationer; noviciate.

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to that state of mediocrity and probationership he has been pleased to place us in here, wherein to check our over confidence. Locke.

PROBATORY. adj. [from probo, Latin.] Serving for trial.

Job's afflictions were no vindictory punishments, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

PROBATUM EST. A Latin expression added to the end of a receipt, signifying it is tried or proved.

Vain the concern that you express,

That uncalf'd Alard will possess

Your house and coach both day and night,

And that Macbeth was haunted left.

By Banquo's restless spirit:

Lend him but fifty louis d' or,

And you shall never see him more;

'Take my advice, probatum est.

Why do the gods indulge our store,

But to secure our ill? Pope.

PROBE. n. f. [from probo, Latin.] A slender wire by which surgeons search the depth of wounds.

A round white stone was lodged, which was so fastened in that part, that the physician with his probe could not stir it. Fell.

I made search with a probe. Wife's Surgery.

PROBE-SCISSORS. n. f. [probe and scissors.]

Scissors used to open wounds, of which the blade thrust into the orifice has a button at the end.

The sinus was snipt up with probe-scissors. Wilkin.

TO PROBE. v. a [probo, Latin.] To search; to try by an instrument.

Nothing can be more painful, than to probe and search a purulent old sore to the bottom. South.

He'd raise a bluish, where secret vice he found,
And tickle while he gently probed the wound. Dry.

PROBITY. n. f. [probité, French; pro-

bitas, Latin.] Honesty; sincerity; veracity.

The truth of our Lord's ascension might be deduced from the probité of the apostles. Tiddes.

So near approach we these celestial land,
By justice, truth, and probité of mind. Pope.

PROBLEM. n. f. [probleme, French; πρόβλημα.] A question proposed.

The problem is, whether a man constantly and strongly believing that such a thing shall be, it doth help any thing to the effecting of the thing. Bacon.

Deciding that abundantly confirmed to advance it above a disputable problem, I proceed to the next proposition. Hammond.

Although in general one understood colours, yet were it not an easy problem to resolve, why grass is green. Brown.

This problem let philosophers resolve,
What makes the globe from West to East revolve? Blackmore.

PROBLEMATICAL. adj. [from problem; problematicus, Fr.] Uncertain; unsettled; disputed; disputable.

It is a question problematical and dubious, whether the observation of the Sabbath was imposed upon Adam, and his posterity in paradise? Wheat.

I promised no better arguments than might be expected in a point problematical. Boyle.

Diligent enquiries into remote and problematical guilt leave a gate wide open to the whole tribe of informers. Swift.

PROBLEMATICALLY. adv. [from problematical.] Uncertainly.

PROBOSCIS. n. f. [proboscis, Latin.] A snout; the trunk of an elephant; but it is used also for the same part in every creature that bears any resemblance thereunto.

The elephant wreath'd, to make them sport,
His little proboscis. Milton.

Absalom pronounced a sentence of death upon his brother. Locke.

3. To form or articulate by the organs of speech.

Language of man pronounced By tongue or brute, and human sense express'd. Milton.

Though diversity of tongues continue, this would render the pronouncing them easier. Helders.

4. To utter rhetorically.

To PRONOUNCE. v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.

How confidently pronounce of them selves, and believe that they are then most pious, when they are most eager and unquiet, yet to sure this is far removed from the true genius of religion. D. B. P.

Every soul may believe, and pronounce confidently, but wise men will, in matters of doctrine, conclude firmly, and in matters of fact, act surely. South's Sermons.

PRONOUNCER. n. f. [from pronounce.] One who pronounces.

The pronouncer thereof shall be condemned in experience. A. B. B.

PRONUNCIATION. n. f. [pronunciatio, from pronuncio, Latin; prononciation, French.]

1. The act or mode of utterance.

The design of speaking being to communicate our thoughts by words, easy, and graceful pronunciation, all kind of letters have been searched out, that were favourable to the purpose. Helders.

It were easy to produce thousands of his verses, which are one to want of half a foot, sometimes a whole one, and which no pronunciation can make otherwise. Dryden.

2. That part of rhetoric which teaches to speak in public with pleasing utterance and graceful gesture.

PROOF. n. f. [from prove.]

1. Evidence; testimony, convincing token; convincing argument; means of conviction.

That they all have always so testified, I see not how we should possibly wish a proof of more palpable than this. Hooker.

This has neither evidence of truth, nor proof sufficient to give it warrant. Hooker.

Though the manner of their trials should be altered, yet the proof of every thing must needs be by the testimony of such persons as the parties shall produce. Spenser.

That which I shall report will bear no credit. Were not the proof so high. Shakespeare.

One soul in both, whereof good proof This day affords. Milton.

Things

Things of several kinds may admit and require several sorts of proofs, all which may be good in their kind. And therefore nothing can be more irrational than for a man to doubt of, or deny the truth of any thing, because it cannot be made out, by such kind of proofs of which the nature of such a thing is not capable. They ought not to expect either testible proof, or demonstration of such matter as we are not capable of such proofs, supposing them to be true.

Thus, yet in death, th' infernal knight relates, And then for proof fulfill'd then common fate.

Those intervening ideas, which serve to show the agreement of any two others, are called proofs.

2. Test; trial; experiment.

Retire or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born! not to contend with spirits of heav'n.

This day to Dagon is a solemn feast: Thy strength they know surpassing human race, And now some publick proof thereof require To honour this great feast.

When the imagination hath contrived the name of such an instrument, and conceives that the event must infallibly answer its hopes, yet then does it strangely deceive in the proof.

Gave, while he taught, and edify'd the more, Because he shew'd, by proofs, 'twas easy to be poor.

My paper gives a timorous writer an opportunity of putting his abilities to the proof.

Sad proof how will a lover can obey.

3. Firm temper; impenetrability; the state of being wrought and hardened, till the expected strength is found by trial to be attained.

Ad proof unto mine armour with thy prayers, And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. To me the cries of fighting fields are chains, Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms; I ask no other blessing of my fate.

Ser arms of proof, both for myself and thee; Chute thou the best.

4. Armour hardened till it will abide a certain trial.

He Bellona's bridegroom, left in proof, Confronted him.

PROPORTION. n. f. [proportion, Fr.
proportio, Lat.]

1. Comparative relation of one thing to another; ratio.

Let any man's wisdom determine by lessening the territory, and increasing the number of inhabitants, what proportion is requisite to the peopling of a region in such a manner, that the land shall be neither too narrow for those whom it feedeth, nor capable of a greater multitude. Raleigh.

By proportion to their rules, we may judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons. Taylor.

Things high equivalent and neighbouring value
By lot are parted, but high heav'n thy share,
In equal balances weigh'd 'gainst earth and hell,

2. Settled relation of comparative quantity; equal degree.

Greater visible good does not always raise men's desires, in proportion to the greatness it is acknowledged to have, though every little trouble sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

He must be little skilled in the world, who thinks that men's talking much or little shall hold proportion only to their knowledge.

Several nations are recovered out of their ignorance, in proportion as they converse more or less with those of the reformed churches. Addison.

In proportion as this resolution grew, the terrors before us seem'd to vanish. Tatler.

His volant touch
Indistinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

4. Symmetry; adaptation of one to another.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end, neither can it ar-thing be available to any end, which is not pro-portionable therunto: and to proportion as well excesses as defects, are opposite. Hobbes.

It must be mutual in proportion due

Given and receiv'd. Milton.

No man of the present age is equal in the strength, proportion and knitting of his limbs, to the Hercules of Fancie. Dryden.

The proportions are so well observ'd, that nothing appears to an advantage, or distinguishes itself above the rest. Addison.

Harmony, with ev'ry grace,
Plays in the fair proportions of her face. Mrs. Cent.

5. Form; size.

All things receiv'd, do such proportion take,
As those things have, wherein they are receiv'd;

So little glasses little faces make,
And narrow webs on narrow frames are weav'd. Davies.

L. Efrange.

PROVIDENCE. n. f. [providence, Fr.
providentia, Latin.]

1. Foresight; timely care; forecast; the act of providing

The only people, such as by their justice and provident give neither cause nor hope to their neighbours to annoy them, so are they not fitted with false pride to pounce others quiet. Sidney.
Provident, for war is the best prevention of it.
Bacon.

An established character spreads the influence of it as move in a high sphere, on all nations;
it reaches farther than their own care and provident
do.

2. The care of God over created beings;
divine superintendence.

This appointeth unto them their kinds of working, the disposition wherof, in the purity of God's own knowledge, is rightly termed providence. Hooker.

Is it not an evident sign of his wonderful providence over us, when that food of eternal life, upon the utter want wherof our endless destruction en-sueth, is prepared and always set in such a readiness? Hooker.

Eternal providence exceeding thought,
Where none appears can make herself a way. Spens.
Providence is an intellectual knowledge, both foreseeing, caring for, and ordering all things, and doth not only behold all past, all present, and all to come, but is the cause of their so being, which preternature is not. Raleigh.

'The world was all before them, where to choose Their place of rest, and providence their guide.

Milton.
'Though the providence of God doth suffer many particular churches, to cease, yet the promise of the same God will never permit that all of them at once shall perish. Prison.

Most provident in peril, bind himself
To a strong mast that liv'd upon the sea. Shakespeare.
We ourselves account such a man for provident, as remembering things past, and observing things present, can, by judgment, and comparing the one with the other, provide for the future. Raleigh.

First excerpt
'The parsimonious emmet, provident
Of future.

Orange, with youth, experience has,
In action young, in council old;
Orange is what Augustus was,
Brave, wary, provident, and bold. Waller.
A very prosperous people, flushed with great successes, and so pious, so humble, so just,
or so provident, as to perpetuate their happiness.

PROVIDENTIAL. adj. [from providence.] Effected by providence; referrible to providence.

What a confusion would it bring upon mankind, if those, unsatisfied with the providential distribution of heats and colds, might take the government into their own hands? L'Efrange.

The lilies grow, and the ravens are fed, according to the course of nature, and yet they are made arguments of providence, not are these things less providential, because regular. Burnet.

The scorched earth, were it not for this remarkably providential contrivance of things, would have been uninhabitable. Woodward.

5. Terms settled; care taken.

This law was only to reform the degenerate English, but there was no care taken for the reformation of the mere Irish, no ordinance, no provision made for the abolishing of their barbarous customs. Davus on Ireland.

PROVISIONAL. adj. [provisional, French; from provision.] Temporarily established; provided for present need.

The commenda semestris grew out of a natural equity, that, in the time of the patron's respite given him to present, the church should not be without a provisional pastor. Ayliffe.

PROVISIONALLY. adv. [from provisional.] By way of provision.

The abbot of St. Martin was born, was baptized, and declared a man provisionally, all time should show what he would prove, nature had moulded him to untowardly. Locke.

PROVISO. n. f. [Latin: as, provisio remota se habiturum esse.] Stipulation; caution; provisional condition.

This proviso is needful, that the sheriff may not have the like power of life as the marshal hath. Spenser.

Some will allow the church no further power, than only to exhort, and this but with a proviso too, that it extends not to such as think themselves too wise to be advised. South.

He doth drive his prisoners, But with proviso and exception, That we, at our own charge, shall ransom him. His brother-in-law. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

PROVOCATION. n. f. [provocatio, Latin; provocation, French.]

1. An act or cause by which anger is raised.

It is a fundamental law, in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their law. Bacon.

Tempt not my swelling rage With black reproaches, scorn and provocation. South.

2. An appeal to a judge.

A provocatio is every act, whereby the office of the judge or his assistance is asked; a provocation including both a judicial and an extrajudicial appeal. Ayliffe.

3. I know not whether, in the following passage, it be appeal or incitement.

The like effects may grow in all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them, between whom there daily and interchangeably pass in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, and petitions. Hooker.

PROVOCATIVE. n. f. [from provoke.]

Any thing which revives a decayed or cloyed appetite.

There would be no variety of tastes to solicit his palate, and occasion excess, nor any artificial provocations to relieve satiety. Addison.

PROVOCATIVENESS. n. f. [from provocative.] The quality of being provocative.

TO PROVOKE. v. a. [provocuer, Fr. provoco, Latin.]

1. To rouse; to excite by something offensive; to awake.

Ye provoke me unto wrath, burning incense unto other gods. Jeremiah, xlv. 8.

PROW. adj. Valiant. Spenser.

PROWESS. n. f. [prodixia, Ital. proesse, French.] Bravery; valour; military gallantry.

Men of such prows, as not to know fear in themselves, and yet to teach it in others that should deal with them; for they had often made their lives triumph over most terrible dangers, never dismayed, and ever fortunate. Sidney.

I hope

That your wisdom will direct my thought, Or that your prows can me yield relief. Spenser.

Henry the fifth by his prows conquered all France. Shakspeare.

Nor should thy prows want praise and eulogium, But that 'tis shewn in treason. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Thence as they

First seen in act of prows eminent, And gear exploits; but of true virtue void. Milton.

Michael! of celestial armies prince, And thou in military prows next, Gabriel! Milton's Paradise Lost.

The vigour of this arm was never vain, And that my wounds I prows I retain, Witness these heaps of slaughter on the plain. Dryden.

There were the entertainments of the softer nations, that fell under the virtue and prows of the two last empires. Temple.

PROWEST. adj. [the superlative formed from prow, adjective.]

1. Bravest; most valiant

They be two of the prowest knights on ground, And oft approv'd in many a hard assay, And eke of surest steel, that may be found, Do arm yourself against that day them to confound. Spenser.

2. Brave; valiant. [from prows.]

The surest of her sex, Angelica, His daughter, fought by many prowest knights. Milton.

TO PROWL. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is doubtful: the old dictionaries write prole, which the dreamer Casaubon derives from prole, ready, quick. Skinner, a far more judicious etymologist, deduces it from proiliter, a diminutive formed by himself from proier, to prey, French; perhaps it may be formed, by accidental corruption, from patrol.] To rove over.

Præp. each place, still in new colours deckt, Sticking one's ill, another to infect. Sidney.

PROWL. v. n. To wander for prey;
to prey; to plunder.

The champion robbeth by night,
And prawls and flictheth by date. Tufts.

Nor do they bear so quietly the loss of some parcels confiscated abroad, as the great detriment which they suffer by some prawling vice-admiral or publick minister. Raleigh.

A when a prawling wolf,
Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for prey. Mil.
Shall he, who looks erect on heav'n,
E'er stoop to mingle with the prawling herd,
And dip his tongue in gore? Thomson.

PROWLER. n. f. [from prawl.] One that roves about for prey.

On churchyards dear,
The disappoint'd problers fall, and dig
The shrouded body from the grave. Thomson.

PROXIMATE. adj. [from proximus, Latin.] Next in the series of ratiocination; near and immediate: opposed to remote and mediate.

Writing a theory of the deluge, we were to shew the proximate natural causes of it. Burnet.

Substance is the remote genus of bird, because it agrees not only to all kinds of animals, but also to things inanimate; but animal is the proximate or nearest genus of bird, because it agrees to fewest other things. Watts's Logic.

PROXIMATELY. adv. [from proximate.]
Immediately; without intervention.

The consideration of our mind, which is incorporeal, and the contemplation of our bodies, which have all the characters of excellent contrivance; these alone easily and proximately guide us to the wise author of all things. Burley.

PROXIME. adj. [from proximus, Latin.] Next, immediate.

A syllogism is made up of three propositions, and these of three terms variously joined: the three terms are called the remote matter of a syllogism, the three propositions the proxime or immediate matter of it. Watts's Logic.

PROXIMITY. n. f. [from proximité, French;
proximitas, from proximus, Latin.] Nearness.

When kingdoms have customably been carried by right of succession, according to proximity of blood, the violation of this course hath always been dangerous. Hayward.

If he plead proximity of blood,
That empty title is with ease withstood. Dryden.
Add the convenience of the situation of the eye.
In respect of proximity to the brain, the sense of common sense. Ray.

I can call to my assistance
Proximately, mark that and lance. Prior.

Must we send to Rob or pull all the popish princes, who have any pretended title to our crown
by the proximity of blood? Swift.

PROXY. n. f. [By contraction from procuracy.]

1. The agency of another.
2. The substitution of another; the agency of a substitute; appearance of a representative.

None acts proximately by a deputy, or can be proximately by proxy. South.

Had Hyde the proxy to
As Venus once was said to do,
The painter must have search'd the skies,
To match the lustre of her eyes. Granville.

3. The person substituted or deputed.
A wise man will commit no business or importance to a proxy, where he may do it himself. Eschwege.

We must not think that we, who act only as their proxies and representatives, may do it for them. Ketticwell.

PRUCE. n. f. [Pruss is the old name for Prussia.] Prussian leather.

Some leatheren bucklers use
Of folded hides, and others shields of pruss. Dryden.

PRUDE. n. f. [prude, French.] A woman overnice and scrupulous, and with false affectation.

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
In fratch of mischief, still on earth to roam. Pope.

Nor one careless thought intrudes,
Lest modest than the speech of prudes. Swift.

PRUDENCE. n. f. [prudencia, French;
prudencia, Latin.] Wisdom applied to practice.

Under prudence is comprehended, that discreet, apt, suiting, and disposing as well of actions as words, in their due place, time, and manner. Præb.

Prudence is principally in reference to actions to be done, and due means, order, season, and method of doing or not doing. Hale.

If the probabilities on the one hand should somewhat preponderate the other, yet if there be no considerable hazard on that side which has the least probability, and a very great apparent danger in a mistake about the other: in this case, prudence will oblige a man to do that which may make most for his own safety. Wilkins.

PRUDENT. adj. [prudens, French;
prudens, Latin.]

1. Practically wise.
The simple inherit folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge. Proverbs, xiv. 18.

I have seen a son of Jesse, that is a man of war, and prudent in matters. 1 Samuel, xvi. 18.

The monarch rose preventing all reply,
Prudent, left from his resolution rais'd Others among the chiefs might offer. Milton.

2. Foreseeing by natural instinct.
So steers the prudent crane
Her annual voyage. Milton.

PRUDENTIAL. adj. [from prudens.] Eligible on principles of prudence.

He acts upon the surest and most prudential grounds, who, whether the principles, which he acts upon, prove true or false, yet secures a happy issue to his actions. South.

Motives are only prudential, and not demonstrative. Tillotson.

These virtues, though of excellent use, some prudential - it is necessary to take with them in practice. Rogers.

PRUDENTIAL. n. f. Maxims of prudence or practical wisdom.

Many stanzas, in poetick measures, contain rules relating to common prudentials, as well as to religion. Watts.

PRUDENTIALITY. n. f. [from prudential.] Eligibility on principles of prudence.

Being incapable rightly to judge the prudentiality of affairs, they only gaze upon the visible success, and thereafter condemn or cry up the whole progression. Brown.

PRUDENTIALLY. adv. [from prudential.]
According to the rules of prudence.

If he acts piously, soberly, and temperately, he acts prudentially and wisely. South.

PRUDENTLY. adv. [from prudens.] Discreetly; judiciously.

Their laws were so prudently framed, as they are found fit for all succeeding times. Bacon.

Such deep designs of empire does he lay
O'er them, whose cause he seems to take in hand,
And prudently would make them lords at sea,
To whom with ease he can give laws by land. Dry.

PRUDERY. n. f. [from prude.] Over-much nicety in conduct.

PRUDISH. adj. [from prude.] Affectedly grave.

I know you all expect, from being in Some formal lecture, spoke with prudent face. Garrick.

TO PRUNE. v. a. [Of unknown deriva-
tion.]

1. To lop; to diversify trees of their super-fluities.

So lop'd and pruned trees do flourish fair. Davies.
Let us ever extol

His bounty, following our delightful task,
To prune those growing plants, and tend these flowers. Milton.

What we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night with wanton growth decides,
Tending to wild. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Horace will our superfluous branches prune,
Give us new rules, and set our harp in tune. Waller.
You have no less right to correct me, than the same hand that raised a tree, has to prune it. Pope.

2. To clear from excrescences; to trim.
His royal bird
Prunes the immortal wing, and cloyes his beak. Shakespeare.

Some sitting on the beach to prune their painted beasts. Dayton.

Many birds prune their feathers; and crows seem to call upon rain, which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

The muse, whole early voice you taught to sing,
Prescrib'd her heights, and prun'd her tender wing. Pope.

TO PRUNE. v. n. To dress; to prink.
A ludicrous word.

Every scribbling man
Grows a top as fast as e'er he can,
Prunes up, and asks his oracle the glass,
If pink or purple best become his face? Dryden.

PRUNE. n. f. [prunus, pruneau, French;
prunum, Latin.] A dried plum.

In drying of pears and prunes in the oven, and removing of them, there is a like operation. Bacon.

PRUNEL. n. f. [prunella.] An herb.
Ainsworth.

PRUNELLO. n. f.

1. A kind of stuff of which the clergy-men's gowns are made.

Worth makes the man, and want of it, the fellow;

The rest is all but leather or prunello. Pope.

2. [Prunelle, French.] A kind of plum.
Ainsworth.

PRUNER. n. f. [from prune.] One that crops trees.

Left thy redundant juice
Should fading leaves, instead of fruits, produce,
The pruner's hand with letting blood must quench
Thy heat, and thy exuberant parts retrench. Denn.

PRUNIFEROUS. adj. [prunum and fero, Latin.] Plum bearing.

PRUNINGHOOK. n. f. A hook or

PRUNINGKNIFE. n. f. knife used in lopping trees.

Let thy hand supply the pruningknife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers. Dryden.

No plough shall hurt the glebe, no pruninghook
the vine. Dryden.

The cyder land, obsequious still to thrones,
Her pruninghooks extended into swords. Philips.

PRURIENCE. n. f. [from prurio, Latin.]

PRURIENCY. n. f. An itching or a great desire or appetite to any thing. Swift.

PRURIENT. adj. [pruriens, Latin.] Itching. Ainsworth.

PRURIGINOUS. adj. [prurio, Latin.]
Tending to an itch.

TO PRY. v. n. [Of unknown derivation.]
To peep narrowly; to inspect officiously, curiously, or impertinently.

I the counterfeit the deep tragedian,
 Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,
 Intending deep suspicion. Shakespeare's Richard III.
 I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,
 When for his hand he had his two sons heads. Shak.
 Watch thou, and wake when others be asleep,
 To pry into the secrets of the state. Shakespeare.
 We of th' offending side
 Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
 And stop all sight holes, every loop, from whence
 The eye of reason may pry in upon us. Shakespeare.
 He that prieth in at her windows, shall also bearken at her doors. Rich. xiv. 23.
 We have naturally a curiosity to be prying and searching into forbidden secrets. L'Estrange.
 Search well
 Each grove and thicket, pry in ev'ry shape,
 Lest hid in some th' arch-hypocrite escape. Dryden.
 I wak'd, and looking round the bow'r
 Search'd ev'ry tree, and pry'd on ev'ry flow'r,
 If any where by chance I might espy
 The rural poet of the melody. Dryden.
 Nor need we with a prying eye survey
 The distant skies, to find the milky way. Creech.
 Actions are of so mist a nature, that as men pry into them, or observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put contriv interpretations on them. Addison.
 All these I frankly own without denying;
 But where has this Praxiteles been prying? Addison.
PSALM. n. f. [psalme, psalme, French;
ψαλμ.] A holy song.
 The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the psalms do both more briefly con tain and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooks.
 Steinhild was mule groom of the chamber, for tuning certain of David's psalms into verse. Piack.
 Those just spirits that were victorious palms,
 Hymns devote and holy psalms
 Singing continually. Milton.
 In another psalm, he speaks of the wisdom and power of God in the creation. Burnet.
 She, her daughters, and her maids, meet to gether at all the hours of prayer in the day, and chant psalms, and other devotions, and spend the rest of their time in such good works, and inno cent diversions, as render them fit to return to their psalms and prayers. Low.
PSALMIST. n. f. [psalmiste, Fr. from psalm.] Writer of holy songs, How much more rational is this system of the psalmist, than the Pagan scheme in Vigil, where one deity is represented as raising a storm, and another as laying it? Addison.
PSALMODY. n. f. [psalmodie, French;
ψαλμωδία.] The act or practice of sing ing holy songs.
PSALMOGRAPHY. n. f. [ψαλμογραφία and γραφία.] The act of writing psalms.
PSALTER. n. f. [psautier, Fr. ψαλτήριον.]
 The volume of psalms; a psalm book.
PSALTERY. n. f. A kind of harp beaten with sticks.
 The trumpets, sacbuts, psalteries, and fifes
 Make the fun dance. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Praise with trumpets, pierce the skies,
 Praise with harps and psalteries. Sandys's Paraph.
 The sweet finger of Israel with his psaltery, loudly resounded the benefits of the almighty Creator. Peacock.
 Nought shall the psaltery and the harp avail,
 When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
 And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.
PSEUDO. n. f. [from ψευδ.] A prefix, which being put before words, signifies false or counterfeit: as, pseudopistle, a counterfeit apostle.
PSEUDOGRAPHY. n. f. False writing.
 I will not pursue the many pseudographs in use, but shew of how great concern the emphasis were, if rightly used. Holder.

PSEBONOLOGY. n. f. [ψευδολογία.] False hood of speech.
 It is not according to the sound rules of pseu bology, to report of a pious prince, that he neglects his devotion; but you may report of a merciful prince, that he has pardoned a criminal who did not deserve it. Abbot.
PSHAW. interj. An expression of con tempt.
 A peevish fellow has some reason for being out of humour, or has a natural incapacity for delight, and therefore disturbs all with pishes and pschaws.
Spenser.
PTISAN. n. f. [ptisane, Fr. πτισαν.] A medical drink made of barley decocted with raisins and liquore.
 Thrice happy were those golden days of old,
 When dear as Burgundy the ptisans fold;
 When patients chose to die with better will,
 Than breathe and pay the apothecary's bill. Garth.
 In fevers the aliment prescribed by Hippocrates, were ptisans and cream of barley. Abbot.
PTYALISM. n. f. [ptyalism, Fr. πτυαλισμός.]
 Salivation; effusion of spittle.
PTYALAGOGUE. n. f. [πτυαλαγωγία and αγωγία.]
 A medicine which discharges spittle.
DiC.
PUBERTY. n. f. [puberté, Fr. pubertas,
Lat.] The time of life in which the two sexes begin first to be acquainted.
 The cause of changing the voice at the years of puberty seemeth to be, for that when much of the moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatic vessels, it leaveth the body more hot than it was, whence cometh the dilatation of the pipes. Bacon.
 All the carnivorous animals would have multi plied exceedingly, before these children that escaped could come to the age of puberty. Bentley's Sermons.
PUBESCENCE. n. f. [from pubesco, Lat.]
 The state of arriving at puberty.
 Solon divided it into ten septenaries; in the first is dentition or falling of teeth, in the second pubescence. Brown.
PUBESCENT. adj. [from pubescens, Lat.]
 Arriving at puberty.
 That the women are menstruent, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.
PUBLICAN. n. f. [from publicus, Latin.]
 1. A toll gatherer.
 As Jesus sat at meat, many publicans and sin ners came and sat down with him. Matth. ix. 10.
 2. A man that keeps a house of general entertainment. In low language.
PUBLICATION. n. f. [publico, Latin.]
 1. The act of publishing; the act of noti fying to the world; divulgation; pro clamations.
 For the instruction of all men to eternal life, it is necessary that the sacred and saving truth of God be openly published unto them, which open publication of heavenly mysteries is by an excel lency termed preaching. Hooker.
 2. Edition; the act of giving a book to the publick.
 An imperfect copy having been offered to a book seller, you consented to the publication of one more correct. Pope.
 The publication of these papers was not owing to our folly, but that of others. Swift.
PUBLIC. adj. [public, publique, Fr. publicus, Latin.]
 1. Belonging to a state or nation; not private
 By following the law of private reason, where the law of publick should take place, they breed disturbance. Hooker.

They have with bitter clamours defaced the publick service of our church. White.
 Of royal maids how wretched is the fate,
 Born only to be victims of the state;
 Our hopes, our wishes, all our passions try'd
 For publick use, the slaves of others pride. Granville.
 Have we not able counsellors hourly watching over the publick weal? Swift.
 2. Open; notorious; generally known.
 Joseph being a just man, and not willing to make her a publick example, was minded to put her away privily. Matthew.
 3. General; done by many.
 A ditmal universal hits, the sound
 Of publick scorn. Milton.
 4. Regarding not private interest, but the good of the community.
 They were publick hearted men, as they paid all taxes, so they gave up all their time to their country's service, without any reward. Clarendon.
 All nations that grew great out of little or no thing, did so merely by the publick mindedness of particular person. South.
 A good magistrate must be endued with a pub lick spirit, that is, with such an excellent temper, as sets him loose from all selfish views, and makes him endeavour towards promoting the common good. Atterbury.
 5. Open for general entertainment.
 The income of the commonwealth is raised on such as have money to spend at taverns and publick houses. Addison.
PUBLIC. n. f. [from publicus, Lat. in publique, French.]
 1. The general body of mankind, or of a state or nation; the people.
 Those nations are most liable to be over-run and conquered, where the people are rich, and where, for want of good conduct, the publick is poor. Davenant.
 The publick is more disposed to censure than to praise. Addison.
 2. Open view; general notice.
 Philosophy, though it likes not a gaudy dress, yet, when it appears in publick, must have so much complacency, as to be clothed in the ordinary fa shion. Locke.
 In private grief; but with a careless scorn,
 In publick seem to triumph, not to mourn. Gray.
 In publick 'tis they hide,
 Where none distinguish. Pope.
PUBLICLY. adv. [from publick.]
 1. In the name of the community.
 This has been so sensibly known by trading na tions, that great rewards are publicly offered for its supply. Addison.
 2. Openly; without concealment.
 Sometimes also it may be private, communicat ing to the judges some things not fit to be pub licly delivered. Bacon.
PUBLICNESS. n. f. [from publick.]
 1. State of belonging to the community.
 The multitude of partners does detract nothing from each private share, nor does the publickness of it lessen property in it. Bj. l.
 2. Openness; state of being generally known or publick.
PUBLICSPIRITED. adj. [publick and spirit.] Having regard to the general advantage above private good.
 'Tis enough to break the neck of all honest purposes, to kill all generous and publickspirited notions in the conception. L'Estrange.
 These were the publickspirited men of the age,
 that is, patriots of their own interest. Dryden.
 Another publickspirited project, which the en vious enemy could not foresee, might set king Charles on the throne. Addison.
 It was generous and publickspirited in you, to be of the kingdom's side in this dispute, by shewing without without reserve, your disapprobation of Wood's design. Swift.

To PUBLISH. v. a. [publier, French; publico, Latin.]

1. To discover to mankind; to make generally and openly known; to proclaim; to divulge.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that You thus have published me? Stat. spere.

His commission from God and his doctrine tend to the impressing the necessity of that reformation which he came to publish. Hammond.

Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all. Milton.

Th' unwearied sun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's power display,
And publishes to every land
The work of an almighty hand. Addison's Spectator.

2. To put forth a book into the world.
If I had not unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it by me. Digby.

PUBLISHER. n. s. [from publish.]
1. One who makes publick or generally known.

Love of you
Hath made me publisher of this pietece. Shakspeare.
The apostle doth not speak as a publisher of a new law, but only as a teacher and monitor of what his Lord and Master had taught before. Kettlewell.

The holy lives, the exemplary sufferings of the publishers of this religion, and the surpassing excellence of that doctrine which they published. Atterbury.

2. One who puts out a book into the world.

A collection of poems appeared, in which the publisher has given me some things that did not belong to me. Prior.

PUCE' LAGE. n. s. [Fr.] A state of virginity. Dict.

PUCK. n. s. [perhaps the same with pug.]
Some sprite among the fairies, common in romances.

O gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp
From off the head of this Athenian swain. Shak.
Turn your cloaks,
Quoth he, for Puck is busy in these oaks,
And this is fairy ground. Collet.

PUCKBALL, or pucksball. n. s. [from puck the fairy, a fairy's ball.] A kind of mushroom full of dust. Dict.

To PU'CKER. v. a. [from puck the fairy:
as ellocks, from elves; or from pruck, a pocket or hollow.] To gather into cor-rugations; to contract into folds or plications.

I saw an hideous spectre; his eyes were sunk into his head, his face pale and withered, and his skin puckered up in wrinkles. Spirit.

A ligature above the part wounded is pernicious, as it puckers up the intestines, and disorders its situation. Sharp.

PU'DDER. n. s. [This is commonly written potter. See POTTER. This is most probably derived by Mr. Lye from judur, Icelandic, a rapid motion.] A tumult; a turbulence and irregular bustle.

Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful padder o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies. Shakspeare's King Lear.

What a pudder is made about offences, and how much is all knowledge pestered by the careless use of words! Locke.

To PU'DDER. v. n. [from the noun.]
To make a tumult, to make a bustle.
Mathematicians, abstracting their thoughts from names, and setting before their minds the ideas themselves, have avoided a great part of that perplexity, puddering and confusion, which has so much hindered knowledge. Locke.

To PU'DDER. v. a. To perplex; to disturb; to confound.

He that will improve every matter of fact into a maxim, will abound in contrary observations, that can be of no other use but to perplex and pudder him. Locke.

PU'DDING. n. s. [pudding, Welsh, an intestine; boadie, Fr. pudding, Swedish.]

1. A kind of food very variously compounded, but generally made of meal, milk, and eggs.

Sallads, and eggs, and lighter fare
Tune the Italian spunk's guitar;
And if I take Dan Congreve right, Pudding and beef make Britons fight. Prior.

2. The gut of an animal.
He'll yield the crew a puddling one of these days;
the king has kill'd his heart. Shakspeare. Henry V.
As false as his guts are made of puddings. Shakspeare.

3. A bowel stuffed with certain mixtures of meal and other ingredients.

4. A proverbial name for victuals.
Mind neither good nor bad, nor right nor wrong,
But eat your pudding, slave, and hold your tongue. Prior.

PU'DDING-GROSS. n. s. [pulegium, Lat.]
A plant.

PU'DDINGPIE. n. s. [pudding and pie.]
A pudding with meat baked in it.

Some cry the covenant, instead Of puddingpies and gingerbread. Hudibras.

PU'DDINGTIME. n. s. [pudding and time.]

1. The time of dinner; the time at which pudding, anciently the first dish, is set upon the table.

2. Nick of time; critical minute.
Mars, that still protects the stout,
In puddlingtime came to his aid. Hudibras.

PU'DDLE. n. s. [from puteolus, Latin,
Skinner; from puil, dirt, old Bavarian,
Junius; hence pool.] A small muddy lake; a dirty plash.

The Hebrews drink of the well head, the Greeks of the stream, and the Latins of the puddle. Hall.

I have drist drink
The stile of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Shakspeare.

A physician cured madmen thus; they were tied to a stake, and then set in a puddle, till brought to their wits. L'Estrange.

Treading where the treacherous puddle lay,
His back flew up; and on the grassy floor
He fell, besmear'd with filth. Dryden's Virgil.

Happy was the man, who was sent on an errand to the most remote street, which he performed with the greatest alacrity, ran through every puddle, and took care to return covered with dirt. Addison.

To PU'DDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To muddy; to foul or pollute with dirt;
to mix dirt and water.

As if I saw my sun shine in a puddled water, I cried out of nothing but Mopsa. Sidney.

Some unbatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and, in such cases,
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakspeare.

His beard they sing'd off with brand of fire,
And ever as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair. Sh.

The noblest blood of Aflick
Runs in my veins, a purer stream than thine;
For, though deriv'd from the same source, thy current

Is puddl'd and defil'd with tyranny. Dryden.

PU'DDLY. adj. [from puddle.] Muddy;
dirty; miry.

Limy, or thick puddly water kills them. Carm.
PU'DDOCK, or purrock. n. s. [for padding or parrock.] A provincial word for a small inclosure. Dict.

PU'DENCY. n. s. [pucent, Latin.] Modesty; shamefacedness.

A pudency to rely, the sweet view on't Might well have warm'd old Saturn. Shakspeare.

PUDICITY. n. s. [pucent, Fr. from pucentia, Lat.] Modesty; chastity. Dict.

PUEFFLOW. n. s. A partner.

This carnal cur
Preys on the issue of his mother's body;
And makes her puefflow with others mean. Shak.

PU'ERILE. adj. [puerile, Fr. puerilis, Lat.]
Childish; boyish.

I looked upon the mansion with a veneration mixt with a pleasure, that represented her to me in those puerile amusements. Pope.

PUERILITY. n. s. [puerilité, French;
from puerilitas, Latin.] Childishness;
boyishness.

A reserve of puerility not shaken off from school.
Dr. vau.

Some men imagining themselves possessed with a divine fury, often fall into toys and trifles, which are only puerilities. Dryden.

PU'ET. n. s. [upupa.] A kind of water fowl.

Among the first sort are coots, fanderlings and pueets. Carew.

The fish have enemies enough; as otters, the cormorant, and the puet. Walter's Angler.

PUFF. n. s. [pos, Dutch, a blast which swells the cheeks.]

1. A quick blast with the mouth.

In garret vile, he with a warming puff Regales chill fingers. Philips.

2. A small blast of wind.

The Rosemary, in the days of Henry VII. with a sudden puff of wind stooped her side, and took in water at her ports in such abundance, as that she instantly sunk. Raleigh.

The naked breathless body lies,

To every puff of wind a slave,
At the beck of every wave,
That once perhaps was fair, rich, stout and wife. Flatman.

A puff of wind blows off cap and wig. L'Estr.
Their fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dry.

With one fierce puff he blows the leaves away,
Expos'd the self-discover'd infant lay. Dryden.

3. A fungous ball filled with dust.

4. Any thing light and porous: as, puff paste.

5. Something to sprinkle powder on the hair. Ainsworth.

To PUFF. v. n. [boffen, Dutch.]

1. To swell the cheeks with wind.

2. To blow with a quick blast.

Wherefore do you follow her,
Like foggy South puffing with wind and rain? Sh.

Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakspeare.

3. To blow with scornfulness.

Some puff at these instances, as being such as were under a different economy of religion, and consequently not directly pertinent to ours. South.

It is really to defy heaven, to puff at damnation, and bid omnipotence do its work. South.

4. To breathe thick and hard.

Seldshorn flamins
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

The ass comes back again, puffing and blowing,
from the chase. L'Estrange.

A true son of the church
Came puffing with his greasy bald-pate choir,
And fumbling o'er his beads. Dryden.

5. To

5. To do or move with hurry, tumour, or tumultuous agitation.

More unconfront than the wind, who woos
Ev'n how the frozen bosom of the North,
And, being anger'd, puff away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping South. Shak.
Then came brave glory puffing by
In filks that whistled, who but he?
He scarce allow'd me half an eye. Herbert.

6. To swell with the wind or air.

A new coal is not to be cast on the nitre, till the detonation be quite ended; unless the puffing matter blow the coal out of the crucible. Boyle.

To PUFF, v. a.

1. To inflate or make swell as with wind : it has up intensive.

Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry bear chafed with sweat? Shak.
Let him fall by his own greatness,
And puff him up with glory, till it swell
And break him. Dinham's Scept.
Flattering of others, and basting of ourselves,
may be referred to lying; the one to please others, and puff them up with self-conceit; the other to gain more honour than is due to ourselves. Ray.

2. To drive or agitate with blasts of wind.

I have seen the cannon,
When it has blown his ranks into the air,
And from his arm puff his own brother. Shaksp.
Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
When the South projects a stormy day,
And when the clearing North will puff the clouds away. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.
Why must the winds all hold their tongue?
If they a little breath should raise,
Would that have spoil'd the poet's song,
Or puff'd away the monarch's praise? Prior.
I have been endeavouring very busily to raise a friendship, which the first breath of any ill-natured by-stander could puff away. Pope.

3. To drive with a blast of breath scornfully.

I can enjoy her while she's kind,
But when she dances in the wind,
And shakes her wings, and will not stay,
I puff the prostitute away;
The little or the much she gave is quietly resign'd. Dryden.

4. To swell or blow up with praise.

The attendants of courts engage them in quarrels of jurisdiction, being truly pariahs curiae, in puffing a court up beyond her bounds for their own advantage. Bacon.

5. To swell or elate with pride.

His looks like a coxcombe up puffed with pride. Tupper.

This army, led by a tender prince,
Whose spirit with divine ambition puffs,
Makes mouths at the invisible event. Shakespeare.
Think not of men above that which is written,
that no one of you be puffed up one against another. 1 Corinthians, iv. 6.

Your ancestors, who puff your mind with pride,
Did not your honour, but their own advance. Dryd.
Who stands safest? tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd prosperity? Pope.
The Physicians were in puff'd up with their constant felicity, that they thought nothing impossible. Brome.

ing to the pressure of your fingers, and arising again
the instant you take them off. Wifeman.

2. Tumid; turgid.

An unjudicious poet who aims at loftiness, runs into the swelling puffy stile, because it looks like greatness. Dryden.

PUG, n. f. [puga, Saxon, a girl. Skin.]

A kind name of a monkey, or any thing tenderly loved.

Upon setting him down, and calling him pug,
I found him to be her favourite monkey. Addison.

PUGGED, adj. [perhaps for pucker'd.]

Crowded; complicated. I never found this word in any other passage.

Nor are we to cavil at the red pugged attire of the turkey, and the long excrescency that hangs down over his bill, when he swells with pride. More against Atheism.

PUGH, interj. [corrupted from puff, or borrowed from the sound.] A word of contempt.

PUGIL, n. f. [pugille, French.] What is taken up between the thumb and two first fingers. Diä.

3. Petty; inconsiderable; small. A puffing tilter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose. Shakespeare.

PUISSANCE, n. f. [puissance, French.] This word seems to have been pronounced with only two syllables. Power; strength; force.

The chariots were drawn not by the strength of horses, but by the puissance of men. Deffraet. of Troy.
Grandfathers, babies and old women;
Or past, or not arriv'd to, pith and puissance. Shak.
Look with forehead bold and big enough

Upon the pow'r and puissance of the king. Shaksp.
Our puissance is our own; our own right hand
Shall teach us highest deeds. Milton.

PUISSANT, adj. [puissant, French.] Powerful; strong; forcible.

The queen is coming with a puissant host. Shak.
Told the most piteous tale of Lear
That ever ear receiv'd; which in recounting
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Shakespeare.

For piety renown'd and puissant deeds. Milton.
The climate of Syria, the far distance from the strength of Christendom, and the near neighbourhood of those that were most puissant among the Mahometans, caused that famous enterprise, after a long continuance of terrible war, to be quite abandoned. Raleigh's Essays.

PUISSANTLY, adv. [from puissant.] Powerfully; forcibly.

PUKE, n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

The sweetener Sassafras are added too. Garth.

PULCHRITUDE, n. f. [pulchritudo, Lat.]

Beauty; grace; handiomeness; quality opposite to deformity.

Neither will it agree unto the beauty of animals, wherein there is an approved pulchritude. Boyer.
Pulchritude is conveyed by the outward sense unto the soul, but a more intellectual faculty is that which relishes it. More.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favour, and by the pulchritude of their souls make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies. South.

That there is a great pulchritude and comeliness of proportion in the leaves, flowers, and fruits of plants, is attested by the general verdict of mankind. Ray on the Creation.

To PULE, v. n. [pialer, French.]

1. To cry like a chicken.

Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings; let the music likewise be sharp and loud. Bacon.

2. To whine; to cry; to whimper.

To speak puling like a beggar at Hallowmas. Shakespeare.

To have a wretched puling fool,
A whining mammet, in her fortunes tender,
To answer, I'll not wed. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
Weak puling things unable to sustain
Their share of labour, and their bread to gain. Dry.
When it covered the water, the child bathed his legs; and when he began this custom, was puling and tender. Locke.

This puling whining harlot rules his reason,
And prompts his zeal for Edward's bastard brood. Rowe.

To PULL, v. a. [pullian, Saxon.]

1. To draw violently towards one: opposed to push, which is to drive from one.

What they seem to offer us with the one hand,
the same with the other they pull back. Hooker.
He put forth his hand, and pulled the dove in. Genesis, viii. 9.

His hand which he put forth dried up, so that he could not pull it in again. 1 Kings, xiii. 4.
Pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter. Jer. vii. 11.

They pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears. Zechariab.

All fortune never crushed that man, whom good fortune deceived not; I therefore have counselled my friends to place all things she gave them so as she might take them from them, not pull them. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

2. To draw forcibly: commonly with on or off, or some other particle.

He was not so desirous of wine, as without just cause of his own to pull them upon him. Hayward.
A boy came in great hurry to pull off my boots. Swift.

3. To pluck; to gather.

When bounteous Autumn rear his head,
He joys to pull the ripen'd pear. Dryden.
Flax pulled in the bloom, will be whiter and stronger than if let stand till the seed is ripe. Mortimer.

4. To tear; to rend.

He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces; he hath made me desolate. Lam. iii. 2.

PULL down. To subvert; to demolish.

Although it was judged in form of a statute, that he should be banished and his whole estate confiscated, and his house pulled down, yet his case even then had no great blot of ignominy. Bacon.

In political affairs, as well as mechanical, it is far easier to pull down than build up; for that structure, which was above ten summer's building, and that by no mean artist, was destroyed in a moment. Hervel's Poetical Poet.

When God is said to build or pull down, 'tis not to be understood of an house; God builds and unbuilds world. Burnet.

To PULL down. To degrade.

He begs the gods to turn blind fortune's wheel, To raise the wretched, and pull down the proud. Rafon mcn.

What title has this queen, but lawless force? And force must pull her down. Dryden.

They may be afraid to pull down ministers and favourites grown formidable. Dowdant.

To PULL up. To extirpate; to eradicate.

What censure, doubting thus of innate principles, I may deserve from men, who will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge, I cannot tell; I persuade myself, that the way I have pursued, being conformable to truth, lays these foundations sure. Locke.

PULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of pulling.

I awaked with a violent pull up in the ring, which was fastened at the top of my box. Gulliver.

The redfreak's pulpos fruit With gold iridescent, and vermilion shines. Philips.

PULPOUSNESS. n. f. [from pulpos.] The quality of being pulpos.

PULPY. adj. [from pulp.] Soft; pappy.

In the walnut and plumbs is a thick pulpy covering, then a hard shell, within which is the seed. Ray on the Grass.

Putrefaction destroys the specific difference of one vegetable from another, converting them into a pulpy substance of an animal nature. Arbutnot.

PULSATION. n. f. [pulsation, French; pulsatio, from pulso, Latin.] The act of beating or moving with quick strokes against any thing opposing.

This original of the lost vein was thus contrived, to avoid the pulsation of the great artery. Brown.

These commotions of the mind and body oppress the heart, whereby it is choked and obstructed in its pulsation. Harvey.

PULSATOR. n. f. [from pulso, Latin.] A striker; a beater.

PULSE. n. f. [pulsus, Latin.]

1. The motion of an artery as the blood is driven through it by the heart, and as it is perceived by the touch.

Pulse is thus accounted for: when the left ventricle of the heart contracts and throws its blood into the great artery, the blood in the artery is not only thrust forward towards the extremities, but the channel of the artery is likewise dilated; when the impetus of the blood against the sides of the artery ceases; that is, when the left ventricle ceases to contract; then the spiral fibres of the artery, by their natural elasticity, return again to their former state, and contract the channel of the artery, till it is again dilated by the diastole of the heart; this diastole of the artery is called its pulse; and the time the spiral fibres are returning to their natural state, is the distance between two pulses; this pulse is in all the arteries of the body at the same time; an high pulse is either vehement or strong, but if the dilatation of the artery does not rise to its usual height, it is called a low or weak pulse, but if between its dilatations there passes more time than usual, it is called a slow pulse; again; if the coats of an artery feel harder than usual from any cause whatsoever, it is called an hard pulse; but if by any contrary cause they are softer, then it is called a soft pulse. Quincy.

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny? Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shak. The propensity of the neighbour kingdoms is not inferior to that of this, which, according to the pulse of states, is a great diminution of their health. Glendon.

My body is from all diseases free; My temperate pulse does regularly beat. Dryden.

If one drop of blood remain in the heart at every pulse, those, in many pulses, will grow to a considerable mass. Arbutnot.

2. Oscillation; vibration; alternate expansion and contraction; alternate approach and recession.

The vibrations or pulses of this medium, that they may cause the alternate fits of easy transmission and easy reflexion, must be twifter than light, and by consequence above seven hundred thousand times swifter than sounds. Newton.

3. To feel one's PULSE. To try or know one's mind artfully.

4. [From pull.] Leguminous plants. Plants not reaped but pulled or plucked.

With Elijah he partook, Or as a guest with Daniel at his pulse. Milton.

Have you pulvilled the coachman and position, that they may not stink of the stable? Congreve.

PUMICE. n. f. [pumex, pumicis, Latin.]

The pumice is evidently a slag or cinder of some kind, originally bearing another form, reduced to this state by fire: it is a lax and spongy matter full of little pores and cavities: of a pale, whitish, grey colour: the pumice is found particularly about the burning mountains. Hist. & Materia Medica.

So long I sat, that all was spent,
Though pumice stones I hastily bent,
And threw, but nought availed. Spenser.

Etna and Veturia, which consist upon sulphur, shoot forth smoke, ashes, and pumice, but no water. Bacon.

Near the Lucrine lake,
Streams of sulphur raise a stifling heat,
And through the pores of the warm pumice sweat. Addison.

PUMMEL. n. f. See POMMEL.

PUMP. n. f. [pampe, Dutch and French.]

1. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells: its operation is performed by the pressure of the air.

A pump grown dry will yield no water, unless you put a little water into it first. Merr.

In the situation that great ship built by Hiero, Athenaus mentions this instrument as being instead of a pump, by the help of which one man might easily drain out the water, though very deep. Wilkins' Dædalus.

Pumps may be made single with a common pump handle, for one man to work them; or double for two. Mortimer.

2. A shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

Get good strings to your beads, new ribbons to your pumps. Shakspeare.

Follow me this jest, now, till thou hast worn out thy pumps, that when the tingle sole of it is worn, the jest may remain singular. Shakspeare.

Thalia's ivy shows her prerogative over comical poetry, her mask, mantle, and pumps are ornaments belonging to the stage. Packham.

Amongst his brethren, he'll hide nothing from you;
But pump not me for politics. Orway's Venice Pres.

PUMPER. n. f. [from pump.] The person or the instrument that pumps.

The flame lasted about two minutes, from the time the pumper began to draw out air. Boyle.

PUMPION. n. f. [papo.] A plant. Miller.

We'll use this gross watery pumpion, and teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

PUN. n. f. [I know not whence this word is to be deduced: to pun, is to grind or beat with a pestle; can pun mean an empty sound, like that of a mortar beaten, as clench, the old word for pun, seems only a corruption of clink?]. An equivocation; a quibble; an expression where a word has at once different meanings.

It is not the word, but the figure that appears on the medal: cuniculus may stand for a rabbit or a mine, but the picture of a rabbit is not the picture of a mine: a pun can be no more engraven, than it can be translated. Addison.

But fill their purse, our poets work is done,
Alike to them by pathos, or by pun. Pope.

TO PUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To quibble; to use the same word at once in different senses.

The hand and head were never lost, of those Who dealt in doggrel, or who pun'd in prose. Dry.
You would be a better man, if you could pun
like Sir Tusham. Tatler.

TO PUNCH. v. a. [pointonner, Fr.] To bore or perforate by driving a sharp instrument.

When I was mortal, my anointed body
By thee was punched full of deadly holes. Shakspeare.

By reason of its constitution it continued open,
as I have seen a hole punched in leather. Wiseman.

Your work will sometimes require to have holes punched in it at the forge, you must then make a steel punch, and harden the point of it without tempering. Moxon.

The fly may, with the hollow and sharp tube of her womb, punch and perforate the skin of the cruca, and cast her eggs into her body. Ray.

PUNCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

past thy puncto. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

PUNCTUAL. adj. [punctuel, French.]

1. Comprised in a point; consisting in a point.

This earth a spot, a grain,
An atom with the firmament compar'd,
And all her number'd stars, that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible; for such
Their distance argues, and their swift return
Diurnal, merely to officiate light
Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

2. Exact; nice; punctilious.

A gentleman punctual of his word, when he had heard that two had agreed upon a meeting, and the one neglected his hour, would lay of him, he is a young man then. Bacon.

This mistake to avoid, we must observe the punctual differences of time, and so distinguish thereof, as not to confound or lose the one in the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That the women are menstruant, and the men pubescent at the year of twice seven, is accounted a punctual truth. Brown.

He was punctual and just in all his dealings. Atterbury.

The correspondence of the death and sufferings of our Lord is so punctual and exact, that they seem rather like a history of events past, than a prophesy of such as were to come. Rogers.

PUNCTUALITY. n. f. [from punctual.]

Nicety; scrupulous exactness.

For the encouragement of those that hereafter should serve other princes, with that punctuality as Siphonius had done, he commanded him to offer him a blank, wherein he might set down his own conditions. Harold's Pict. Epist.

His memory was serviceable, but not officious;
faithful to things and business, but unwillingly retaining the contexture and punctualities of the words. Fall.

Though some of these punctualities did not so much conduce to preserve the text, yet all of them shew the infinite one which was taken, that there might be no mistake in a single letter. Gros.

PUNCTUALLY. adv. [from punctual.]

Nicely; exactly; scrupulously.

There were no use at all for war or law, if every man had prudence to conceive how much of right were due both to and from himself, and were willing to punctually just as to perform what he knew requisite, and to rest contented with his own. Raleigh.

Concerning the heavenly bodies, there is so much exactness in their motions, that they punctually

usually come to the same period to the hundredth part of a minute. Ray on the Creation.

I freely bring what Moses hath related to the test, comparing it with things as now they stand; and finding his account to be perfectly true, I fairly declare what I find. Woodward.

PUNCTUALNESS. n. f. [from punctual.] Exactness; nicety.

The most literal translation of the scriptures, in the most natural signification of the words, is generally the best, and the same punctualness which debauch other writings, preserveth the spirit and majesty of the sacred text. Felton.

Setting a candle before a child, bid him look upon it, and his pupil shall contract itself very much to exclude the light; as when after we have been some time in the dark, a bright light is suddenly brought in and set before us, till the pupils of our eyes have gradually contracted. Ray.

The uvea has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it, called the pupil of the eye. Morre.

The rays, which enter the eye at several parts of the pupils, have several obliquities to the glaises. Newton's Opticks.

2. [Pupille, French; pupillus, Latin.]

A scholar; one under the care of a tutor.

My master sues to her, and she hath taught her suitor,

He being her pupil, to become her tutor. Shakspeare.

One of my father's servants, With store of tears this reason gan unfold,

And said my guardian would his pupil kill. Fairfax.

If this arch politician find in his pupil any remorse, any fear of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition. Rahigh.

Tutors

PUP

Tutors should behave reverently before their pupils. L'Estrange.

The great work of a governor is, to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.

3. A ward; one under the care of a guardian.

Tell me, thou pupil to great Pericles, What are the grounds

To undertake so young, so vast a care? Dryd.

So some weak youth, which else would poorly rise,

Jove's tree adopts, and lifts him to the skies;

Through the new pupil soft'ning juices flow,

Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Ticket.

PUPILAGE. n. f. [from pupil.]

1. State of being a scholar

The excellent Doctor most readily received this votary and prof. lyte to learning into his care and pupilage for several years. Fell

The severity of the father's brow, whilst they are under the discipline of pupilage, should be relaxed as fast as their age, discretion, and good behaviour allow. Locke.

2. Wardship; minority.

Three sons he dying left, all under age,

By means whereof their uncle Vortigern

Usurp'd the crown, during their pupilage;

Which the infant tutors gathering to fear,

Them closely into Armorick did bear. Spenser.

PUPILARY. adj. [pupillaire, French; pupillaris, Lat. from pupil.] Pertaining to a pupil or ward.

PUPPET. n. f. [poupée, French; pupus, Latin.]

1. A small image moved by wire in a mock drama; a wooden tragedian.

Once Zelmane could not stir, but that as if they had been puppets, whose motion stood only upon her pleasure, Bassilius with serviceable steps, Gynecia with greedy eyes would follow her. Sidney.

Divers of them did keep in their houses certain things made of cotton wool, in the manner of puppets. Abbot.

His last wife was a woman of breeding, good humour and compliance, as for you, you look like a puppet moved by clock-work. Arbutnot.

As the pipes of some carv'd organ move,

The gilded puppets dance. Pope.

In florid impotence he speaks,

And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

2. A word of contempt.

Thou, an Egyptian puppet, shalt be shewn

In Rome as well as I. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Oh excellent motion! oh exceeding puppet! Shakespeare.

Why is a handsome wife ador'd

By every cockcomb but her lord?

From yonder puppetman inquire,

Who wisely hides his wood and wire. Swift.

PUPPETSHOW. n. f. [puppet and show.]

A mock drama performed by wooden images moved by wire.

Tim, you have a taste I know,

And often see a puppetshow. Swift.

To induce him to be fond of learning, he would frequently carry him to the puppetshow. Arbutnot and Pope.

A president of the council will make no more impression upon my mind, than the sight of a puppetshow. Pope.

PUPPY. n. f. [poupée, French.]

1. A whelp; progeny of a bitch.

He

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions,

As maids of thirteen do of puppy dogs. Shakespeare.

The rogues slighted me into the river with as little remorse, as they would have drowned a bitch's blind puppies, fifteen in the litter. Shakespeare.

PUR

The fow to the bitch says, your puppies are all blind. L'Estrange.

Nature does the puppy's eyelid close,

Till the bright sun has nine times set and rose. Gay.

2. A name of contemptuous reproach to a man.

I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster; a most scurvy monster! Shakespeare.

Thus much I have added, because there are some puppies which have given it out. Raleigh.

I found my place taken up by an ill-bred awkward puppy, with a money bag under each arm.

Addison's Guardian.

That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare.

'Tis known to several

Of head piece extraordinary; lower messes

Peachance, are to this business purblind. Shakespeare.

Like to purblind moles, no greater light than that little which they shun. Drummond.

Darkness, that here furrounded our purblind understandings, will vanish at the dawning of eternal day. Boyle.

'Dropt in bear thick-sighted eyes,

They'd make them see in darkest night,

Like owls, though purblind in the light. Hudibras.

Purblind man

Sees but a part o' th' chain, the nearest links;

His eyes not carrying to that equal beam,

That posies all above. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

PURBLINDNESS. n. f. [from purblind.] Shortness of sight.

PURCHASABLE. adj. [from purchase.]

That may be purchased, bought; or obtained.

Money being the counterbalance to all things purchasable by it, as much as you take off from the value of money, so much you add to the price of things exchanged for it. Locke.

To PURCHASE. v. a. [pourschasser, Fr.]

1. To acquire, not inherit.

2. To buy for a price.

You have many a purchas'd slave,

Which like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,

You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakespeare.

His sons buried him in the cave, which Abraham

pur. chased of the sons of Heth. Genesis, xxv.

3. To obtain at any expence, as of labour or danger.

A world who would not purchase with a bribe?

Milton.

4. To expiate or recompense by a fine or forfeit.

Nor tears nor prayers shall pur. chase out abuses;

Therefore use none. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

PURCHASE. n. f. [pourschas, old Fr. from the verb.]

1. Any thing bought or obtained for a price.

He that procures his child a good mind, makes a better purchase for him, than if he laid out the money for an addition to his former acres. Locke on Education.

Our thieving dean has purchas'd land,

A purchase which will bring him clear

Above his rent four pounds a year. Swift.

2. Any thing of which possession is taken any other way than by inheritance.

A beauty wailing and distressed widow

Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye;

Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts

To base declension. Shakespeare.

The fox repairs to the wolf's cell, and takes possession of his horses; but he had little joy of the purchase. L'Estrange.

PURCHASER. n. f. [from purchase.] A buyer; one that gains any thing for a price.

Upon one only alienation and change, the purchaser is to pass both licence, fine, and recovery. Bacon.

So unhappy have been the purchasers of church lands, that though in such purchases men have usually the cheapest pennyworths, yet they have not always the best bargains. South.

Most of the old statutes may be well supposed to have been cheaper to their first owners than they are to a modern purchaser. Addison.

PURE. adj. [pur, pure, French; purus, Latin.]

3. Unmingled; not altered by mixtures.

An alabaster box of pure nard. Milton.

What philosophy shall comfort a villain, that is haled to the rack for murdering his prince? his cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow, his body is rent with torment, his name with ignominy, his soul with shame and sorrow, which are to last eternally. Taylor.

Pure and mixt, when applied to bodies, are much akin to simple and compound; so a guinea is pure gold, if it has in it no alloy. Watts's Logic.

4. Genuine; real; unadulterated.

Pure religion before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unsporting from the world. James.

5. Not connected with any thing extrinsick. as, pure mathematics.

Mathematics, in its latitude is divided into pure and mixed; and though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in the general, as geometry; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. Wilkins.

When a proposition expresses that the predicate is connected with the subject, it is called a pure proposition, as every true christian is an honest man. Watts.

6. Free; clear.

Who can say, I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my sin? Proverbs, xv. 9.

His mind of evil pure

Supports him, and intention free from fraud. Philips.

Char. t this purpose,
Which being so horrible, to bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue. Shaksp. Hamlet.

He with the rage of boisterous helet the passages of purpose, that when the army should be forward he might in the streets, fit for his purpose, be upon them. Knapp.

And I persuade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow, were not his purpose.
To use him farther yet. Milton's Angels.

That kind of certainty which doth not admit of any doubt, may serve us as well to all intents and purpose, as that which is infallible. Williams.

St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this very purpose. Burnet.

They, who are desirous of a name in painting, should read and make observations of such things as they find for their purpose. Dryden's Discourse.

He travelled the world, on purpose to converse with the most learned men. Guardian.

The common materials, which the ancients made their ships of, were the orrus or wild ash; the fir was likewise used for this purpose. Arbutnot.

I do this, on purpose to give you a more sensible impression of the imperfection of your knowledge. Watts.

Where men err against this method, it is usually on purpose, and to shew their learning. Swift.

2. Effect; consequence; the end desired.

To find purpose had the council of Jerusalem then assembled, if once their determination being set down, men might afterwards have defended their former opinions. Hucker.

The ground will be like a wood, which keepeth out the sun, and so continueth the wet, whereby it will never grow to purpose that year. Paeon.

Thou design is a war, whenever they can open it with a prospect of succeeding to purpose. Temple.

Such first principles will leave us to very little purpose, and we shall be as much at a loss with as without them, if they may, by any human power, such as is the will of our teachers, or opinions of our companions, be altered or lost in us. Locke.

He that would relish success to purpose, should keep his passion cool, and his expectation low. Cotter on Desire.

What the Romans have done is not worth notice, having had little occasion to make use of this art, and what they have of it to purpose being borrowed from Aristotle. Baker.

3. Instance; example.

His common for double dealers to be taken in their own snares, as is the purpose in the matter of power. L'Esperance.

placed on each side of the army four ranks of waggoners. Knapp.

Doubling my crime, I promise and deceive,
Purple to slay, whilst swearing to forgive. Prior.

PURPOSELY. adv. [from purpose] By design; by intention.

Being the instrument which God hath purposefully framed thereby to work the knowledge of salvation in the hearts of men, what cause is there wherefore it should not be acknowledged a most apt mean? Hooker.

I have purposefully avoided to speak any thing concerning the treatment due to such persons. Addison.

In composing this discourse, I purposefully declined all offensive and displeasing truths. Asterbury.

The vulgar thus through imitation err,
As oft the learn'd by being singular;

So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
By chance go right, they purposefully go wrong. Pope.

PURPRISÉ. n. f. [pourpris, old French;
purpurisum, law Latin.] A close or inclosure; as also the whole compass of a manour.

The place of justice is hallowed; and therefore not only the bench but the foot-pace and precincts, and purpris, ought to be preserved without corruption. Bacon's Essays.

PURR. n. f. [alauda marina.] A sea lark.
Ainsworth.

To PURR. v. a. To murmur as a cat or leopard in pleasure.

PURSE. n. f. [bourse, Fr. purrs, Welsh.]
A small bag in which money is contained.

She bears the purse too; she is a region in Gulana, all gold and bounty. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Shalt the son of England prove a thief,
And take purse? Shaksp. Henry IV.

He sent certain of the chief prisoners, richly apparelled, with their purse full of money, into the city. Knolles.

I will give him the thousand pieces, and to his great surprise, present him with another purse of the same value. Addison.

To PURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into a purse.

I am spell caught by Philidel,
And purse'd within a net. Dryden.

tention.

Arm, warriors, arms for fight! the foe at hand,
Whom fled we thought, will have us long pursumit.
Milton.

2. Endeavour to attain.

This means they long pursum'd, but little gain'd,
Yet after much pursumit, at length obtain'd. Dryden.

Its honours and vanities are continually passing before him, and inviting his pursumit. Rogers.

He has annexed a secret pleasure to the idea of any thing that is new or uncommon, that he might encourage us in the pursumit after knowledge, and engage us to search into the wonders of his creation. Addison.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursumit of nearer satisfactions, and to the removal of those uneasinesses it feels in its longings after them. Locke.

3. Prosecution; continuance of endeavour.

He concluded with sighs and tears, to conjure them, that they would no more press him to give his consent to a thing so contrary to his reason, the execution whereof would break his heart, and that they would give over further pursumit of it. Clarendon.

PURSUMIVANT. n. f. [poursuivant, Fr.]

A state messenger; an attendant on the heralds.

How oft do they with golden pinions cleave
The sitting skies, like flying pursumivants. Spenser.

These grey locks, the pursumivants of death, Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Send out a purveyor at arms
To Stanley's regiment; bid him bring his power
Before sun-setting. Shakespeare's Richard III.
For helmets, crests, mantles, and supporters, I leave the reader to Edmond Bolton, Gerard Leigh, John Ferne, and John Guillim Portsmouth, pur- veyors of arms, who have diligently laboured in armory. Camden's Remains.

The purveyors came next,
And like the heralds each his scutcheon bore. Dry.
PURSY. adj. [pouff, French.] Short breathed and fat.

In the fatness of these purpy times,
Virtue itself of vice must pardon beg,
Yea couch and woo for leave to do it good. Shakespeare.

Now breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease,
And purpy insolence shall break his wind
With fear and horrid sigh. Shak. Tamer of Athens.

An hostess's dowry,
Grown fat and purpy by retail
Of pots of beer and bottled ale. Hudibras.

By these, the Medes
Perfume their breaths, and cure old purpy men.

Whence mounting up, they find purveyance meet
Of all that royal princes court became. Spenser.

2. Procurement of victuals.

3. An exaction of provisions for the king's followers.
Some lands be more changeable than others; as for their lying near to the borders, or because of great and continual purveyances that are made upon them. Bacon.

PURVEYOR. n. f. [from purvey.]

1. One that provides victuals.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh, and massin bread.
Harte.

The purveyors or victuallers are much to be condemned, as not a little faulty in that behalf.
Raleigh.

2. A procurer; a pimp.

These women are such cunning purveyors!
Mark where their appetites have once been pleased,
The same resemblance in a younger lover,
Lies brooding in their fancies the same pleasures.
Dryden.

The stranger, ravished at his good fortune, is introduced to some imaginary title; for this purveyor has her representatives of some of the finest ladies.
Addison.

3. An officer who exacted provision for the king's followers.

PURVIEW. n. f. [pourvoir, French.] Proviso; providing clause.

Though the petition expresses only treason and felony, yet the act is general against all appeals in parliament; and many times the purview of an act is larger than the preamble or the petition. Hale.

PURULENCE. n. f. [from purulent.]
PURULENCY. n. f. Generation of pus or matter.

Consumptions are induced by purulency in any

PURULENT. adj. [purulent, Fr. puru- lensus, Latin.] Consisting of pus or the running of wounds.

A carcase of man is most infectious and odious to man, and purulent matter of wounds to found flesh. Bacon.

It is no easy thing always to discern, whether the suspected matter expectorated by a cough be really purulent, that is, such as comes from an ulcer.
Blackmore.

It spews a filthy froth
Of matter purulent and white,
Which happen'd on the skin to light,
And there corrupting on a wound,
Spreads leprosy. Swift's Miscellari.

An acrimonious or purulent matter, stagnating in some organ, is more easily deposited upon the liver than any other part. Arbutnot.

PUS. n. f. [Latin.] The matter of a well digested sore.

Acrid substances break the vessels, and produce an ichor instead of laudable pus. Arbutnot.

To PUSH. v. a. [pousser, French.]

1. To strike with a thrust.

If the ox push a man-servant, he shall be stoned.
Exodus, xxi.

Psalms xlv. 5.

Waters forcing way,
Sidelong had push'd a mountain from his seat,
Half sunk with all his pines. Milton.

This terrible scene which might have proved dangerous, if Cornelius had not been pushed out of the room. Arbutnot.

4. To press forward.

He forewarns his care
With rules to push his fortune or to bear. Dryden.

With such impudence did he push this matter, that when he heard the cries of above a million of people begging for their bread, he term'd it the clamours of faction. Addison.

Arts and sciences, in one and the same century, have arrived at great perfection, and no wonder,
since every age has a kind of universal genius, which inclines those that live in it to some particular studies; the work then being pushed on by many hands, must go forward. Dryden.

The objections against the quaternary of elements and ternary of principles, need not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves. Boyle.

QUATERNION. n. s. [quaternion, Latin.]

The number four.

Air and ye elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform, and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise. Milton.
I have not in this scheme of these nine quater-nions of consonants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

QUATERNITY. n. s. [quaternus, Latin.]

The number four.

The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.

QUATRAIN. n. s. [quatrain, French.]

A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,

Say, Stella, what is love, whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Discol'd to light the mischief making boy?

Mrs. Mulso.

I have writ my poem in quatrain or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judged them of greater dignity for the sound and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.

To QUAY. v. n. [cpavan, Saxon.]

conspire,

What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire? Sidney.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shak.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shak.

The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue; and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisdom, xix. 20.

Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entrench better. Bacon's Natural History.

Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;

One draws and blows reciprocating air,

Others to quench the hissing male prepare. Dryden.

You have already quench'd sedition's brand,
And seal, which burnt it, only warms the land. Dryden.

When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Maxon's Mexican Exercises.

2. To still any passion or commotion; to repress any motion of the mind good or bad.

But if all aim but this be levell'd false,

The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakespeare.

Blessed God, that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of devotion, and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any wilful sin, or let it go out again for want of furring it up and employing it. Duty of Man.

3. To allay thirst.

Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases, a drowning of the spirits. Scrub.

4. To destroy.

When death's form appears, she seareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishment,

She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That she might all future ill prevent. Davies.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.

QUERULOUS. adj. [querulus, Latin.] Mourning; whining; habitually complaining.

Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulus, wrathful, and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was their nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hacker.

The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crest-fallen. Howell's Vocal Forest.

Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulus, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Lo ke.

QUERULOUSLY. adv. [from querulous.] In a complaining manner.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As unoid hinges, querulously thrill. Young.

QUERULOUSNESS. n. f. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.

QUERRY. n. f. [from quare, Latin.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.

I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a further search to be made by others. Newt. n.

This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.

TO QUERRY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.

Three Cambridge sophs,
Each prompt to query, answer and debate. Pope.

QUEST. n. f. [queste, French.]

1. Search; act of seeking.

None but such as this bold age unblest,
Can ever thrive in that unlucky quest. Spenser.

If luty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blinck? Shakespeare.

Fair silver buskin'd nymphs,
I know this quest of yours and free intent
Was all in honour and devotion meant,
To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milt.

An aged man in rural weeds,
Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep, and the void immensity
To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Twould be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day, where Adam left it; and I the rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African,
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison.

We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spectator.

2. [For inquest.] An empannelled jury.

What's my offence?
Where is the evidence, that doth accuse me?
What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? Shakespeare. Richard III.

3. Searchers. Collectively.

You have been hotly call'd for,
When, being not at your lodging to be found,
The senate sent above three several quests
To search you out. Shakespeare's Othello.

4. Enquiry; examination.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.

Gad not abroad at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion. Herbert.

TO QUEST. v. n. [queter, French; from the noun.] To go in search.

QUESTANT. n. f. [from quester, Fr.] Seeker; endeavourer after.

See, that you come
Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when
The bravest questant shrinks, and what you seek,
That same may cry you loud. Shakespeare.

QUESTION. n. f. [question, French; questio, Latin.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing enquired.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is most reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Enquiry; disquisition.

It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.

There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. John.

4. Affair to be examined.

In points of honour to be try'd,
Suppose the question not your own. Swift.

How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question? Hatfield.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.

This is not my writing,
Though I confess much like the character
But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakespeare.

'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is call'd in question, and to tame and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Locke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

Whoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.

Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe's Parragon.

8. State of being the subject of present enquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Astbury's Preface.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it,
For that it stands not in such warlike brace,
But altogether lacks the abilities
That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakespeare.

TO QUESTION. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To enquire.

Suddenly out of this delightful dream
The man awoke, and would have question'd more;
But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.

He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much, but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he alketh. Ha. on's Effigies.

Unreasonable subtilty will still seem to be reasoning; and at least will question, when it cannot answer. Heyday.

2. To debate by interrogatories.

I pray you think you question with a Jew;
You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakespeare.

TO QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case your; Shakespeare.

Be now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much prophan'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your pow'r so silencing your son. Shakespeare.

But hark you, Kate,
I must not have you henceforth question me,
Whither I go. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

This construction is not so undubitably to be received as not at all to be questioned. Brown.

2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.

O impotent estate of human life!
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire,
And most we question what we most desire. Prior.

3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.

Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chanceth to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person despised. Scrub.

QUESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]

1. Doubtful; disputable.

Your accustomed clemency will take in good worth.

All they that go down into the dust, shall kneel before him; and no man hath quicken'd his own soul. Palm xxii. 30.

This may mean that would be
As heavy to me, as the odious; but
The mistress which I serve, quicken what's dead,
And makes my labours pleasures. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Fair soul, since to the fairest body join'd
You give such lively life, such *quicken*ing power,
And influence of such celestial kind,
As keeps it still in youth's immortal flower. Shakespeare.
He throws

His influence round, and kindles as he passes
Hence flocks and herds, and men, and beasts, and fowls

With breath, are quicken'd, and attract their souls. Dryden.

2. To hasten; to accelerate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or quicken a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Others were appointed to consider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the most principal. Hayward.

Though any commodity should shift hands never so fast, yet, if they did not cease to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent. Locke.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER. n. f. [quick and silver]

argentum vivum, Latin]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water; it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest the ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but the miners, seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and similarity of parts, it is neither dissolvable by fire, malleable, nor fixed. It seems to constitute a particular class of fluids, and is rather the master or basis of all metals, than a metal itself. mercury is of considerable use in gilding, making looking glass, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations besides medicine. Cambers.

Cinnabar make th a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the ball is wont to be made in Libia of blunstone and quicksilver burnt. Poetam.

Pleasure is twofold; and fewer we enjoy; Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy; We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill, Still it eludes us, and it glitters still. If it is d at last, compute your mighty gains, What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Cung.

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.]

Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does: I would pound to use instead of the metal a glass ground convex on the forehead, and a much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton's Opticks.

QUIDAM. n. f. [Lat.]

Somebody. Not now used.

For envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those to many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser.

QUIDDANY. n. f. [cydonium, cydonatum, Latin; quiddein, German, a quince.]

The debt immense of endless gratitude.

Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own.

Hooker.

Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit herself with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it?
